Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators. Abbot.

ELUCTATION.* n. s. [Lat. eluctatus.]

1. The act of bursting forth.

There is nothing more acceptable unto the ingenious world than this noble eluctation of truth. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 5.

2. Escape.

By the power of our faith, which is the victory that overcomes the world, at last we do happily recover, and find ourselves freed by a comfortable and joyful eluctation.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.

TO ELUDE.† v. a. [eludo, Lat.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape; "to deceive."

Bullockar.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope.

ELUDIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVELOCKS. n. s. [from elvs and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies. See ELF-LOCK.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELVERS.* n. s. Small eels, caught in some parts of the kingdom, particularly about Gloucester and Tewksbury. These are, in reality, young congers, or sea-eels. They get up into rivers while very small; and, as they precede the shads, it is conjectured that they supply them with food. Chambers.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves

Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees.

Milton, P. L.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons hear!

Pope.

ELVISH.† adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish, Dr. Johnson says.

One of his contemporaries so wrote it. See ELFISH. The old word elvish is applied, by Chaucer, to chymistry, which he calls "elvish craft," and "elvish lore," Chan. Yeoman's Tale; where Mr. Tyrwhitt supposes the meaning to be fairy-like or fantastick. But see ELFISH. Elsewhere, by the father of our poetry, the word is used for sullen, reserved, morose; a sense unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.]

1. Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Here no night-ravens lodge, more black than pitch,
Nor elvish ghosts, nor ghastly owls do flee.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!

The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shakspeare.

No muse hath been so bold,

Or of the latter or the old,

Those elvish secrets to unfold,

Which lie from others reading.

Drayton.

2. Reserved; coy; disdainful.

He seemeth elvish by his countenance,

For unto no wight doth he dalliance.

Chaucer, Prol. to Sir Thopas.

Thou art too elvish, faith thou art; too elvish, and too coy:
Am I, I pray thee, beggarly, that such a flocke enjoy?

Warner, Albion's England, (1597.)

ELUMBATED. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Dict.

ELUSION.† n. s. [old Fr. elusion, Lat. elusio.

This is also a very old English word, though Dr. Johnson has produced no other example than the comparatively modern one from Woodward.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice.

If our senses be daily deceived in this matter, then is the sensible sacrament nothing els but an elusion of our senses.

Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 307.

This place of our Apostle stands for us unshaken by any the impotent blasts of his frivolous elusions, and shall warrant us against Earth and Hell, that a bishop may be the husband of one wife. Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 108.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ELUSIVE.† adj. [from elude.]

1. Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives

Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives. Pope, Odys.

2. Tending to deceive; fallacious.

Pleasures, and enjoyments, which their religion continued them were insubstantial, elusive, and transitory.

Student, ii. 364.

ELUSORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusory tergiversation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO ELUTE. v. a. [eluo, Lat.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO ELUTRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbuthnot on Air.

ELUTRIATION.* n. s. [from elutrio.] The act of straining off; in metallurgy, the separating the lighter matters, from the mixed ores of metals, by means of great quantities of fair water. Chambers.

ELYSIAN. adj. [elysus, Lat.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,

ELYSIUM. n. s. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,
 So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
 Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
 And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

'EM. A contraction of them.
 For he could coin and counterfeit
 New words with little or no wit;
 And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
 The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

TO EMACERATE.* v. n. [Lat. emacero.] Our old word for emaciate. Thus Bullokar: "To emacerate, or emaciate; to wax lean; to pine away with sorrow, envy, toil, or the like." We now use macerate and maceration.

EMACERATION.* n. s. [from emacerate.] Leanness, or falling away in flesh. Bullokar.

TO EMACIATE. v. a. [emacio, Lat.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

TO EMACIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIATE.* adj. [Lat. emaciatus.] Sunk; wasted; deprived of flesh.

The vivid vermeil fled his fady cheek,
 And his big paunch, distended with the spoils
 Of half his flock, emaciate, groan'd beneath
 Superiour pride, and nightier lust of power. Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

EMACIATION. n. s. [emaciatius, Lat.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from an hectic fever. Graunt.

TO EMACULATE.* v. a. [Lat. emaculo.] To make clean; to take out spots. Cockeram.

Lipsius, Savile, Pichena, and others have taken great pains with him, [Tacitus] in emaculating the text, settling the reading, &c. Hales, Rep. p. 273.

EMACULATION. n. s. [emaculo, Lat.] The act of freeing any thing from spots of foulness. Dict.

E'MANANT.† adj. [emanans, Lat. South writes our word emanent, unless it be an error of the press, which is not agreeable to its etymon emano, emanas, &c. emanans. In a modern periodical publication I have seen emane for emanate, to which, if it could be tolerated, South's emanent, supposing it not a corruption, might then be added.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Evidence brings a property emanant from the essence and being of knowledge. South, Sermon ix. 322.

E M A

TO E'MANATE.† v. n. [emano, Lat.] To issue or flow from something else.

They have their residence in a city, whose constitution has emanated, neither from the charter of their king, nor from their legislative power. Burke.

EMANATION. n. s. [emanatio, Lat.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Bp. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;
 Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;
 So faultless was the frame, as if the whole
 Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each epanation of his fires
 That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
 Each art he prompts, each charm he can create:
 What'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

E'MANATIVE. adj. [from emano, Lat.] Issuing from another. Dict.

TO EMANCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Lat.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession, of their parents that were in the parents power, excluding all emancipated children. Ayliffe, Parergon.

They emancipated themselves from dependance. Arbutnot.

EMANCIPATION.† n. s. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of error, without hope of emancipation. Glanville, Scerpius.

A certain freedom and activity of mind which immediately followed the national emancipation from superstition, contributed also to produce innumerable compositions in poetry. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 1.

EMANCIPATOR.* n. s. [from emancipate.] One who releases from any confinement or restriction.

Let us review and refute the sophisms of both; and first of the emancipators. The Merits of the Catholics, &c. p. 358.

TO EMARGINATE.† v. a. [Lat. emargino, to take away the scurf about the edge of a wound, In this sense also it stands in the old English vocabulary of Cockeram. At present it furnishes the sense of indent; as in botany, "an emarginated leaf."] To take away the margin or edge of any thing.

TO EMASCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Lat.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;
 Women emaculate a monarch's reign. Dryden.

Dangerous principles impose upon our understandings, emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper. Collier.

EMASCULATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Unmanned; effeminate; vitiated.

E M B

The harassed, degenerate, emasculate slave is offended with a jubilee, a manumission; servitude is his sensuality; he will not go out free.

Hammond, Works, iv. 515.
Store enough of such emasculate theology as this!
Hammond, Works, iv. 571.

EMASCULATION.† n. s. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.

About the time that author came out purged, a reverend doctor had the book, and singularly commended it, as it stood now corrected and amended; for it had passed the stool of repentance, and I believe the emasculations were some Scotchman's.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

To EMBA'LE. v. a. [emballer, Fr.]

1. To make up into a bundle.

2. To bind up; to enclose.

Below her ham her weed did somewhat train,
And her straight legs most bravely were embul'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain.

Spenser, F. Q.

To EMBA'LM.† v. a. [embalmer, French; embalsamar, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromatics, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalme me,

Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.

Shakespeare.

I would shew future times

What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and toms on thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as such,
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch.

Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embalm the dead.

Pope.

2. To fill with sweet scent.

The buxom air embalm'd

With odours.

Milton, P. L.

EMBA'LMER. n. s. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight:
Where fast embarr'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years belleged to make them thrall.

Spenser, F. Q.

In form of airy members fair embarr'd
His spirits pure were subject to our sight.

Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embarr'd all further trade for the future.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not embarr'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us.

Donne.

EMBARCATION. n. s. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solitious for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet.

Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGÓ. n. s. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez.

Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it.

Dryden.

E M B

To EMBA'RGÓ.* v. a. [from the noun.] To lay an embargo upon. This word is not modern, as it may seem; for Coles, in his Lat. Dict. 1679. has "to imbargue, or lay an imbargo upon."

To EMBA'RK.† v. a. [embarquer, French.]

1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, so numerous late,

All left, in one small bottom swam embark'd. Milton, P. L.

The king had provided a good fleet, and had caused a boily of three thousand foot to be embarked on those ships. Clarendon.

Straight to the ships Aeneas took his way,
Embark'd his men, and skimm'd along the sea. Dryden, Æn.

2. To engage another in any affair.

All the propositions he could make to Spain, could not induce them to enter into such an alliance with him as might embark them against France. Ed. Clarendon, Life, iii. 956.

To EMBA'RK. v. n.

1. To go on shipboard.

I should with speed embark,

And with their embassy return to Greece. A. Philips.

2. To engage in any affair.

EMBARCATION.* See EMBARCATION.

To EMBA'RRASS. v. a. [embarrasser, French.] To perplex; to distress; to entangle.

I saw my friend a little embarrassed, and turned away.

Spectator.

EMBA'RRASSMENT. n. s. [from embarrass.] Perplexity; entanglement.

Let your method be plain, that your hearers may run through it without embarrassment, and take a clear view of the whole.

Watts, Logic.

To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from base.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground. Bacon.

I have no servile or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgement.

Wotton.

I will rather choose to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibleness shall be forced to bend.

King Charles.

A pleasure, high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly.

South.

2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I bless my lot, that was so lucky plac'd:

But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embas'd

Spenser.

EMBA'SEMENT.* n. s. [from embase.] Deterioration; depravation.

What shall we think of the pleasures of sin, which receive a farther embasement, and diminution, from the superaddition of a curse.

South, Sermon, viii. S. iv.

Queen Elizabeth did by little and little rectify this detestable embasement of coin.

Hale, Hist. Pl. Cr. ch. 17.

EMBA'SSADE.* n. s. [French, embassade.] Used by Spenser in the sense either of an embassy, or as embassadors; but now disused. See AMBASSADE.

But when her words embassade forth she sends,
Lord, how sweet musick that unto them lends.

Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

EMBA'SSADOR.† n. s. [old Fr. embassadeur.] Barbazan prefers the spelling with em to that of am, the word, as he thinks, being derived from the Lat. immittere, to send out. V. Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom. But see AMBASSADOUR.] One sent on a publick message.

Mighty Jove's embassadeur appear'd

With the same message.

Myself my king's embassador will go.

Denham.

Dryden.

EMBA'SSADRESS.† n. s.

1. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies.

Garth, Ovid.

2. The wife of an ambassador.

Do you frequent the Dutch ambassador or embassadress?

Ld. Chesterfield.

E'MBASSAGE.† } n. s. [It may be observed, that though E'MBASSY. } our authors write almost indiscrimi-nately ambassador or ambussador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy, Dr. Johnson says. This is not, universally, however, the case. The Cyclopædia of Chambers presents EMBASSY with the accompaniment of AMBASSY; and a writer in the Modern Universal History has followed the spelling of ambassy. I mention this to shew the exception, but not to propose a deviation from embassy. Spenser has once placed the accent upon the second syllable of embassage, F. Q. iii. ix. 28. And so on embassade. But the accent is now fixed upon the first.]

1. A publick message: a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I lend ear to.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

When he was at Newcastle, he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threatening embassy.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees.

Bp. Taylor.

3. An errand, in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made?

Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me;

And am I last that know it?

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

To EMBA'THE.* See To IMBATHE.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattl'd;

To horse! you gallant prizes, strait to horse!

Shakspeare.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me.

Shakspeare.

On their embattled ranks the waves return
And overwhelm the war!

Milton, P. L.

Embattled nations strive in vain

The hero's glory to restrain:

Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,

In vain against his force conspire.

Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night

Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle.

By the second hour of the morn.

Shakspeare.

EMBA'TTLED.* adj. Indented like a battlement; a term still used in heraldry; and of very ancient usage in our poetry.

His comb was redder than the fine corall,

Embattled, as it were a castel wall.

Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.

Wearing a diademe embattl'd wide

With hundred turrets, like a turribunt.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 28.

To EMBA'Y. v. a.

1. [from baigner, to bathe, French.] To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

EMB

In her lap a little babe did play

His cruel sport;

For in her streaming blood he did embay

His little hands, and tender joints embrew.

Spenser, F. Q.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,

And slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. [from bay.] To enclose in a bay; to landlock.

If that the Turkish fleet

Be upt inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.

Shakspeare.

EMBE'DDED.* adj. [en and bed.] Sunk in another substance.

When we reflect upon the number of muscles, not fewer than four hundred and forty-six, in the human body, known and named, how contiguous they lie to each other, in layers, as it were, over one another, crossing one another, sometimes embedded in one another, sometimes perforating one another; an arrangement, which leaves to each its liberty and its full play, must necessarily require meditation and counsel.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

To EMBE'LLISH.† v. a. [embellir, French. Our word was formerly without the h. "Her tears embelliss'd her wisely chastity." Chaucer, Leg. of Lucrece.] To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

Bayleaves between,

And primroses green,

Embellish the sweet violet.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

The work as of a kingly palace-gate,

With frontispiece of diamond and gold

Embellish'd.

Milton, P. L.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,

Embellish'd with her first created green;

Where crystal streams through living turf had run,

Contented with an urn of native stone.

Dryden, Jun.

The names of the figures that embellish'd the discourses of those who understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well.

Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellish'd by emperours, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins.

Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscitious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,

The embellishments of life.

Addison, Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church.

Atterbury.

EMBERING. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,

Keep emberings well, and fasting days;

What law commands we ought to obey,

For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday.

Tusser.

EMBERS. n. s. without a singular. [æmýpua, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Icelandick, hot ashes or cinders.]

Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopp'd, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,

Some still removed place will fit,

While glowing embers through the room

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom.

Milton, Il Pens.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low

Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,

He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow

Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.

Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;

He takes hot embers, and renews the fires.

Dryden, Virgil.

EMBERWEEK. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To EMBEZZLE. † v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil, Dr. Johnson says, which is a great mistake. It is derived from the old Fr. besler, or embesler. See Kelham's Norm. Dict. "embeasiler, to filch." See also To BEZZLE.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is entrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men. Hayward.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.

When thou hast embezzled all thy store,

EMBEZZLEMENT. n. s. [from embezzle.]

1. The act of appropriating to himself that which is received in trust for another.

2. The thing appropriated.

EMBEZZLER. * n. s. [from embezzle.] One who appropriates to himself what is received in trust for another.

To EMBIBE. * See To IMBIBE. Embibe, or enbibe, is the spelling of Chaucer.

To EMBLAZE. v. a. [blazonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Th' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton, Comus.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got. Shakespeare.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd,

To EMBLAZON. v. a. [blazonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.

2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to shew.

We find Augustus, for some petty conquest, emblazoned by the poets to the highest pitch. Hakewill on Providence.

EMBLAZONER. * n. s. [from emblazon.]

1. One who publishes in a pompous manner.

But I step again to this emblazoner of his title page, (whether it be the same man or no, I leave it in the midst,) and here I find him pronouncing, without reprieve, those animadversions to be a slanderous and scurrilous libel.

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

2. A herald; a blazoner. See BLAZONER.

EMBLAZONRY. n. s. [from emblazon.] Pictures upon shields.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd
With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milton, P. L.

EMBLEM. † n. s. [εμβλημα, Gr. emblem, Fr.]

1. Inlay; enamel; any thing inserted into the body of another.

Underfoot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broider'd the ground, more colour'd than with stone
Of costliest emblem. Milton, P. I.

2. An occult representation; an allusive picture; a typical designation.

She had all the royal makings of a queen,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems, Laid nobly on her. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast. Peacham on Drawing.

Gentle Thames,
Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace. Denham.

He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws. Addison, Guardian.

To EMBLEM. † v. a. [from the noun.] To represent in an occult or allusive manner. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing a solitary instance from Glauville; but it was apparently very common, and has been well employed by Glauville's contemporaries, or rather his seniors.

Jacob is as man; Laban is the churlish, envious, ungrateful world; Leah is the pleasure it pays us with: blemished in that which is the life of beauty; perished even in the eye; embled too by the sex of frailty, Women. Fellham, Res. i. 81.

The story of the world doth often afford such a kind of representation: sometimes it presenteth a fair view of glorious monarchs and flourishing nations, symbolized by the magnificence of cities and palaces; high and eminent prosperity in the grandees of the earth, figured by the cedars; plentiful and opulent private estates, embled by the pregnancy of the fields. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 362.

I observe many of these airy forms bearing equal date almost with the evils embled in them.

The primitive fight of elements doth fitly emblem that of opinions. Spencer on Prod. p. 220.
Glauville, Srepsis.

EMBLEMA'TICAL. } adj. [from emblem.]
EMBLEMA'TICK. }

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematic skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLEMATIST. n. s. [from emblem.] A writer or inventor of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematis, and heralds. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EMBLEMATIZE. * v. a. [from emblem.] To represent by an emblem.

Now the senary should emblematize the world, you shall understand thus: The world is self-complete, filled and perfected by its own parts: so is the senarius, which has no denoninated part but a sixth, third, and second, viz. 1, 2, 3. which put together make six; and Euclid defines a perfect number from this property, "a perfect number is that which is equal to its parts."

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 159.

This garden of Eden may emblemize, while Adam is dis-couraged of as innocent and obedient to God, the delights of the Spirit.

Ibid. p. 239.

EMBLEMENTS.* n. s. plur. [Fr. emblaver, to sow the ground with corn; Gr. ἐμβάλλειν.] Profits arising from land sown, or generally from the ground.

If tenant for life sow the land, and afterwards die, the exe-cutor of the tenant for life shall have the emblemments, and not he in reversion.

Cowel.

The doctrine of emblemments extends not only to corn sown, but to roots planted, or other annual artificial profit.

Blackstone.

EMBLEMIZING.* n. s. [from emblem. Fr. emblemature.] A making of emblems.

Cotgrave.

TO EMBO'DY.* See TO IMBODY. Dr. Johnson writes embody under the word incorporate, though he takes no other notice of it in his Dictionary.

EMBO'GUING.* n. s. [from the Fr. emboucheure.] Though we have disembogue in almost all our dic-tionaries, yet embogue perhaps will be found in none. Nor have I met with an instance of it in any other shape than that of the following noun. The mouth of a river or fen; the place where it empties itself into the sea.

The frosts are so hard and sharp in the emboguing of the Meotis fens, that in the very place where Mithridates' lieuten-ant had delivered a battle to his enemies on hard ground, and dry-footed, and there defeated them, the next summer he there obtained another sea-battle against them.

Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 113.

TO EMBOIL.* See TO IMBOIL.

TO EMBO'LDEN.* See TO IMBOLDEN. Yet em-bolden seems to be the best authorized method of writing the word. So Milton wrote it; so the translators of our present version of the Bible; and so Chaucer.

EMBOLISM. n. s. [ἐμβολισμός, Gr.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different man-ners in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could.

Holder on Time.

2. The time inserted: intercalatory time.

EMBOLUS. n. s. [ἐμβολος, Gr.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our member is like a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by an embolus, like the heart.

Arbutnot.

TO EMBO'NDER.* v. a. [old Fr. emborder.] To adorn with a border. See TO IMBORDER. Dr. Johnson has neither. Milton writes it imborder.

TO EMBO'SK.* See TO IMBOSK.

TO EMBO'SS.* v. a [from bosse, a protuberance, Fr.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with some-thing rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion Upon the breached verge of the salt flood; Which once a-day, with his embossed froth, The turbulent surge shall cover.

Shakspeare, Timon.

Thou art while,

A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle, In my corrupted blood.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

E M B

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss, And all his people.

Milton, P. L.

All croud in heaps, as at a night-alarm

The bees drive out upon each other's backs,

To emboss their hives in clusters.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

On the sides of this (which began the other part) were placed two great statues, feigned of gold, one of Atlas, the other of Hercules, in varied postures, bearing up the clouds, which were of relieve, embossed, and tralucet as naturals.

B. Jonson, Masques.

Then o'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd

Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost.

Dryden, Virg.

3. To enclose; to include; to cover. [from em-boister, French, to enclose in a box. See TO IMBOX.]

The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd

In his brass-plated body to emboss.

Spenser, F. Q.

• And in the way, as she did weep and wail,

A knight her met; in mighty arms emboss'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. To enclose in a thicket. [emboscure, Ital.]

Like that self-begotten bird

In the Arabian woods embost.

Milton, S. A.

5. To hunt hard. "When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, espe-cially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, Fr. a tumour." Hammer. It is rather, in the present sense, from the Spanish emboçar, to cast out of the mouth. And it is thus often applied, by our old writers, to a hunted deer.

As a dismayed deer in chase embost.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 17.

Oh, he is more mad

Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly

Was never so embost.

Shakspeare.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night.

Shakspeare.

Look as an hart, with sweat and blood imbrued, Chas'd and embost, thirsts in the soil to be.

P. Fletcher, Poet. Misc. p. 86.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. s. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; emi-nence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments.

Bacon, Essays.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo.

Addison on Italy.

TO EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, Fr.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmest fruit

Embottled, long as Priamean Troy

Withstood the Greeks, endures.

Philips.

TO EMBO'UND.* See TO IMBOUND.

TO EMBO'W.* v. a. [from bow.] To bend like a bow; to arch; to vault. Dr. Johnson writes this word imbow; but his examples from Spenser and Milton are against it, being in the authors' own editions embow. Bacon indeed has imbow. Our old lexi-cography, on the other hand, gives embow; as, "roofs carved and embowed," Barret.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure

Embow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 19.

I saw a bull as white as driven snow,

With gilden horns embowed like the moon.

Spenser, Vis. of World's Vanity.

The gilted roofs embow'd with curious work.

Gascoigne's Jocasta, i. 2.
The inner part is hollow or embowed, [i. e. vaulted,] and the outward is bended.

Bruskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 47.

The high embowed roof,

With antick pillars massy proof. Milton, Il Pens.

To EMBO'WEL.† v. a. [from bowel. Norm. Fr. embouellecz, embowelled.]

1. To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exenterate.

The schools,
Embowed of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakespeare.

Embowed'd will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The roar

Embowed'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton, P. L.

Fossils and minerals that th' embowed'd earth Displays. Philips.

2. To bury within any other substance.

His dreadful mud he heaved up aloft,
And with his dreadful instrument of yre
Thought sure have powdered him to powder soft,
Or deepe embowed'd in the earth entyre. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 15.

He conceals the loss, and counterfeits another ring like it of silver, embowelling a motto to this purpose, "O perti-naces, O prenitentes!" from which pattern most mahome-tans to this day wear rings of silver. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 267.

EMBO'WELLER.* n. s. [from embowel.] One who takes out entrails.

We shall next proceed to speak of the surgeon or embalmer, and of all other inferior officers under him such as the dis-sector, emboweller, pollinator, salter, and other dependant servants, as dressers of the dead, painters, carvers, and the like. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 283.

To EMBO'WER.* v. n. [from bower.] To lodge; to build; to bower. See To BOWER.

But the small birds, in their wide boughs embouring, Chaunted their sundry tunes. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

To EMBO'X.* See To IMBOX.

To EMBRA'CE.† v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

1. To hold fondly in the arms; to squeeze in kindness.

Embrace again, my sons! he foes no more;
Nor stain your country with her children's gore. Dryden.

2. To seize ardently or eagerly; to lay hold on; to welcome; to accept willingly any thing offered.
Chaucer uses it in the sense of take hold of.

[She] could so the people's heart embrace,
That each her loveth that loketh on her face. Clerk's Tale.

I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Shakespeare.

At first, her mother-earth she holdeth dear,
And doth embrace the world, and worldly things. Davies.

They who are represented by the wise virgins, embraced the profession of the Christian religion, as the foolish virgins also had done. Tillotson.

3. To comprehend; to take in: as, natural philosophy embraces many sciences.

4. To comprise; to enclose; to contain; to encompass; to encircle.

Low at his feet a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd. Denham.

5. To admit; to receive.

Fenton, Heav'n give thee joy!
What cannot be eschew'd, must be embraced. Shakespeare.

If a man can be assured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

6. To find; to take.

Flance, his son,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

7. To squeeze in a hostile manner.

8. To fasten; to fit close. [Ital. imbracciare, "porsi ed avvoltarsi al braccio, cappa, scudo, &c." Vocab.
Della Crusca.]

Who, seeing him from far so fierce to pricke,
His warlike arms about him gan embrace,
And in the rest his ready spear did sticke. Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 26.

To EMBRA'CE. v. n. To join in an embrace.

Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. Shakespeare.

EMBRA'CE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clasp; fond pressure in the arms; hug.

Thames, the most lov'd of all the ocean's sons
By his old sire, to his embraces runs. Denham.

2. An hostile squeeze; crush.

EMBRA'CEMENT.† n. s. [from embrace.]

1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.

Thus death becomes a rival to us all;
And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
In whose decay virtue's fair shrine must fall. Sidney.

There cherishing one another with dear, though chaste embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that Love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.

2. Hostile hug; grapple.

These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a throw'd embracement. Sidney.

3. Comprehension.

Nor can her wide embracements filled be. Davies.

4. State of being contained; enclosure.

The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. Conjugal endearment.

I would freelier rejoice in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare, Coriol.

6. Admission; reception.

Both of them being God's instruments for the conversion of the Northumbrians to the embracement of Christian religion. Weever.

EMBRA'CE.† n. s. [from embrace.] The person embracing.

Yet are they the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gust, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howell.

The error once broached, found many embracers.

Fuller, Holy War. p. 96.

EMBRA'CEMENT.* n. s. [from embrace.] An embrace.

Huloet, and Barret.

Such wanton tunes, [and] homely embracements.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 496.

To EMBRA'ID.* v. a. [from braid, which, I have already observed, is the parent of our word apbraid.]

To censure in opprobrious terms. Not now in use.

See To BRAID.

[He] embraided him with cowardise.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 167. b.

EMBRA'SURE. n. s. [embrasure, French.] An aperture in the wall, through which the cannon is pointed;
battlement.

To EMBRA'VE.† v. a. [from brave.]

1. To decorate; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to adorn. Not now in use.

E M B

So, both agree their bodies to engrave;
The great earth's womb they open to the sky,
And, with sad cypress, seemly it embrace.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To inspire with fortitude.

Psyche, embrav'd by Chari's generous flame,
Strives in devotion's furnace to refine
Her pious self.

Beaumont's Psyche, (1651.) xvii. Arg.

To EMBROCATÉ. v. a. [εμβρῶχω.] To rub any part diseased with medicinal liquors.

I returned her a glass with oil of roses and vinegar, to embrocate her arm.

Wiseman on Inflammations.

EMBROCAT'ION † n. s. [from embrocate. This word is of no great age in our language. When Sir William Petty addressed Hartlib on the Advancement of Learning, it was embroché. "Administering—to each patient his physick—embrochaes, fomentations, frictions." Advice of Sir W. Petty, &c. 1648. p. 16.]

1. The act of rubbing any part diseased with medicinal liquors or spirits.

2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embrocated.

We endeavour to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embrocations of various sorts.

Wiseman, Surg.

To EMBROIDER. † v. a. [broder, French. Our word at first was embraid or embroud. "Mantles embrouded well," Chaucer's Flower and Leaf; and even so late, as in 1630. "The dew—with pearl embrouds each meadow," Drayton's Muses Elysium. It was also embroder before embroider, as in Barret's Dictionary of 1580.] To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures of needlework.

Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering or lifting of one favour upon another.

Wotton.

Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,

That it became a garden of a wood.

Waller.

Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a suit of her own embroidering.

Spectator, No. 606.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;

This slave the floor, and that the table spreads.

Pope.

EMBROIDERER. n. s. [from embroider.] One that adorns clothes with needlework.

Blue silk and purple, the work of the embroiderer.

Reclus, xlv. 10.

EMBROIDERY. n. s. [from embroider.]

1. Figures raised upon a ground; variegated needlework.

Write,

In emerald tufts, flowers purpl'd, blue and white,

Like saphire, pearl in rich embroidery,

Buckled below her knighthood's ben'ing knee.

Shakespeare.

Laces and embroideries are more costly than either warm or comely.

Bacon, Advice to Filiius.

Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,

With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd.

Pope.

2. Variegation; diversity of colours.

If the natural embroidery of the meadows were helpt and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landskip of his own possessions.

Spectator, No. 474.

To EMBROÏL. v. a. [broûiller, French.]

1. To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by dissension and discord.

I had no passion, design, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war.

K. Charles.

Rumour next, and chance,

And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,

And discord with a thousand various mouths.

Milton, P. L.

E M B

When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.

Dryden.

2. To perplex; to entangle.

The Christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.

Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.

That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders.

Decay of Piety.

EMBROÏLEMENT. * n. s. [from embroil.] Confusion; disturbance.

The cause of this uncertainty was, the embroilments and factions that were then amongst the Arabs.

Maunderell's Journey, p. 56.

To EMBROÏTEL. v. a. [brothel, brodel.] To enclose in a brothel.

Men, which choose

Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute,

Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.

Donne.

To EMBROÏWN. * See To IMBROWN.

To EMBROÏE. * See To IMBUE. The most ancient method of writing this word, which I have found, is, in 1555, with em. And so Barret in his Dict. 1580.

EMBRYO. † } n. s. [ἐμβρυον, Gr. The word embryon EMBRYON. } was asserted by Addison to be of Milton's coinage; but it existed, before Milton wrote, both as an adjective and a substantive; though Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice it as an adjective; nor has he any instance of it in the plural number as a substantive.]

1. The offspring yet unfinished in the womb.

The bringing forth of living creatures may be accelerated, if the embryo ripeneth and perfecteth sooner.

Bacon.

An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryon.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The reverence I owe to that one womb,

In which we both were embryons, makes me suffer

What's past.

Beaumont and FL. Q. of Corinth.

Embryos, and idiots, eremites, and friars.

Milton, P. L.

The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet

Of waters, embryon immature involv'd,

Appear'd not.

Milton, P. L.

When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,

See how she works, and how her work proceeds.

Blackmore.

While the promis'd fruit

Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd

Within its crimson folds.

Thomson, Spring.

2. The state of any thing yet not fit for production; yet unfinished.

The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo.

Swift.

EMBRYON. * adj. Yet unfinished; not yet ready for production.

The embryon blossom of each spray.

W. Browne, Brit. Past. (1613.) i. 4.

Join sense unto reason, and experiment unto speculation; and so give life unto embryon truths, and verities yet in their chaos.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 5.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,

Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring

Their embryon atoms.

A kind of embryon, imperfect, heathen.

Hammond's Works, iv. 571.

To EMBURSE. * See To IMBURSE.

To EMBURSY. * v. a. [from busy.] To employ.

The accustomed and usage

Of ancient poets, ye wote full wele, hath bene

Them selfs to embury with all their whole courage.

Skelton's Poems, p. 11.

E M E

EME.† n. s. [came, Saxon.] Uncle. Now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says; which is not exactly the case. See EAME.

To EMEND.* v. a. [Lat. emendo.] To amend; to correct.

Have us excused, that we no better do,
An other time to emende it if we can.

Mystery of Candlemas-day, (1512.)

EMENDABLE. adj. [emendo, Lat.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.

EMENDATELY.* adj. [Lat. emendatus.] Without fault; correct.

The printers were very desirous to have the bible come forth as faultless and emendately as the shortness of the time for the recognising of the same would require.

Taverner, Dedication of the Bible to K. Hen. VIII. (1539.)

EMENDATION.† n. s. [old Fr. emendation.]

1. Correction; alteration of any thing from worse to better.

Nor is the Divine goodness less to be seen, venerated, and praised, in those emendations, which follow, to our ease and comfort, the lawful applications of art, and ingenuity.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 57.

The essence and the relation of every thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

Who ever heard either of ελεειν or ελεειν?—Παλαια comes forty times in Homer, and if he [Barnes] had been, as he thinks himself, a Mæonides, sextus pavone ex Pythagoræo," he might have found out the emendation.

Bentley to Dr. Davies.

E'MENDATOR.† n. s. [emendo, Lat.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

In the copies, which they bring us out of the pretended original, there is so great an uncertainty and disagreement betwixt them, that the Roman emendators of Gratian themselves know not how to trust it.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, (1672.) p. 123.

EMENDATORY.* adj. [Lat. emendatus.] Contributing correction or emendation.

Jortin used frequently to mention this attempt to discredit emendatory criticism, with strong marks of derision.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

The high credit in which emendatory criticism was held at the beginning of this [the eighteenth] century.

Hurd, Life of Warburton.

To EMENDICATE.* v. a. [Lat. emendico.] To beg. See To MENDICATE.

EMERALD. n. s. [emeraude, French; smaragdus, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness.

Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald?

Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ore.

Woodward on Fossils.

Nor deeper verdure dyes the robe of spring,

When first she gives it to the southern gale,

Than the green emerald shows.

Thomson, Summer.

To EMERGE.† v. n. [emerge, Lat. Dr. Johnson's earliest authority is that of Boyle. In 1656, the word was enumerated, by Heylin, amongst the uncouth and uncommon.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit.

Boyle.

The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters retired.

Burnet, Theory.

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,
Pursued their track.

Dryden, Homer.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer or more.

Newton, Opticks.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;

And shining suns descend to sable night.

Dryden, Fab.

When, from dewy shade emerging bright,

Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,

Let each deplore his dead.

Pope, Odys.

I have often studied, and admired, why their parents would, under such mean encouragements, design their sons for the church; and those chief most towards and capable and select geniuses among their children, who must needs have emerged in a secular life.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 40.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd

A rising world.

Thomson, Summer.

EMERGENCE.† n. s. [from emerge.]

1. The act of rising out of any fluid by which any thing is covered.

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The act of rising or starting into view.

The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation.

Boyle on Colours.

The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours.

Newton, Opticks.

3. Any sudden occasion, unexpected casualty.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance rather than of philosophy.

Granville, Scepis.

4. Pressing necessity; exigence. A sense not proper.

In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer.

Addison, Freeholder.

EMERGENT.† adj. [from emerge.]

1. Rising out of that which overwhelms or obscures it.

Love made my emergent fortune once more look

Above the main, which now shall hit the stars.

B. Jonson.

Immediately the mountains huge appear

Emergent, and their broad bare backs unheave

Into the clouds.

Milton, P. L.

2. Rising into view, or notice, or honour.

The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

3. Proceeding of issuing from any thing.

Is't not

A perfect act and absolute in law?

Seal'd and deliver'd before witnesses?

The day and date emergent.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

The Stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter.

South.

4. Sudden; unexpectedly casual.

She composed certain prayers, herself, upon emergent occasions.

Bacon, Collect. of Q. Elizabeth.

All the lords declared, that, upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their servants upon their horses.

Clarendon.

Christ was of that infinite wisdom and knowledge, as to enact laws of that universal compliance with all the conditions of man, that there can be no new emergent inconvenience unforeseen by him, that should at any time make the obligation of them to cease.

South, Serm. vii. 117.

EMERITED.* adj. [emeritus, Lat.] Allowed to have done sufficient publick service.

I had the honour to lay one of the first foundation stones of that royal structure, erected for the reception and encouragement of emerited and well-deserving seamen.

Evelyn, iii. vii. § 15.

EMERODS. } n. s. [corrupted by ignorant pronunciation from hemorrhoids, ἀιμορροΐδες.]

EMERODS. } Painful swellings of the hemorrhoidal veins; piles.

He destroyed them, and smote them with emerods.

1 Sam. v. 6.

EMERSION.† n. s. [from emerge.]

1. The act of rising out of any fluid.

They demonstrate or set forth by their baptism, that is, by their immersion into the water, and their emersion out of the same, their death and resurrection.

Knafehull, Annot. (1693) p. 207.

2. The time when a star, having been obscured by its too near approach to the sun, appears again.

The time was in the heliacal emersion, when it becomes at greatest distance from the sun.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

EMERY. n. s. [smiris, Lat. esmeril, Fr.]

Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. The lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel.

Hill, Mat. Med.

EMETICAL. } adj. [ἐμετικόν.] Having the quality of EMETICK. } provoking vomits.

Various are the temperaments and operations of herbs; some purgative, some emetick, and some sudorifick.

Hale.

EMETICALLY. adv. [from emetical.] In such a manner as to provoke to vomit.

It has been complained of, that preparations of silver have produced violent vomits; whereas we have not observed duly refined silver to work emetically, even in women and girls.

Boyle.

EMETICK.* n. s. A medicine provoking vomits.

There is a vast deal of propriety, as well as pleasantry, in the weapons Garth [in his Dispersary] has given to his warriors. They are armed much in character, with causticks, emeticks, &c.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

E'MEU, or E'MEW.* n. s. In zoology, a name of the cassowary, a large bird of the ostrich kind; used in our heraldick language.

EMICATION. n. s. [emicatio, Lat.] Sparkling; flying off in small particles, as sprightly liquors.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication, as also a crass and fœtid exhalation.

Brown.

EMICTIION. n. s. [from emictum, Lat.] Urine; what is voided by the urinary passages.

Gravel and stone grind away the flesh, and effuse the blood apparent in a sanguine emiction.

Harvey on Consumptions.

EMIGRANT.* n. s. [Lat. emigrans.] One who emigrates. A modern word. See EMIGRATE.

All these emigrants were to receive pay and subsistence for some years at the publick expence.

Robertson.

In these expeditions the northern emigrants were attended by their poets.

Warton, Hist. R. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

EMIGRATE.* part. adj. [Lat. emigratus.] This word, a century and a half since, was in use, apparently as a philosophical term; for it is ridiculed as such, by a quaint author, among several Platonical expressions, in the passage which I cite. The accent is there placed on the second syllable. Of the verb emigrate the use is probably modern. Dr. Johnson gives no example.] Wandering; roving.

But let our souls emigrate meet,

And in abstract embraces greet;

(Till that the fates permit) let's live

Intranced by love intuitive. Gayton, Notes on D. Quir. p. 228.

To EMIGRATE.† v. n. [emigro, Lat.] To remove from one place to another.

A man who stays at home, gains nothing by his neighbour's emigrating. Conversation in Boswell's Life of Johnson, in 1778.

They don't emigrate, till they could earn their livelihood in some way at home.

Ibid.

The surplus parts of this phletorick body always must emigrate.

Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 60.

EMIGRATION. n. s. [from emigrate.] Change of habitation; removal from one place to another.

We find the originals of many kingdoms either by victories, or by emigrations, or intestine commotions.

Hale.

EMINENCE.† } n. s. [eminence, Fr. eminentia, Lat.]

EMINENCY. }

1. Loftiness; height.

2. Summit; highest part.

Mountains abound with different vegetables, every vertex or eminency affording new kinds.

Ray on the Creation.

3. A part rising above the rest.

They must be smooth, almost imperceptible to the touch, and without either eminence or cavities.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. A place where one is exposed to general notice.

A satire or libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous figure.

Addison, Spectator.

5. Exaltation; conspicuousness; state of being exposed to view; reputation; celebrity; fame; preferment; greatness.

You've too a woman's heart, which ever yet

Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Alterations are attributed to the powerfulest under princes, where the eminency of one obscureth the rest.

Wotton.

He deserv'd no such return

From me, whom he created what I was,

In that bright eminence; and with his good

Unbraided none.

Milton, P. L.

Where men cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet religion makes a compensation, by teaching content.

Tillotson.

These two were men of eminency, of learning as well as piety.

Stillington.

6. Supreme degree.

Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,

And pure thou wert created, we enjoy

In eminence.

Milton, P. L.

7. Notice; distinction.

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo;

Present him eminence both with eye and tongue.

Shakspeare.

8. A title given to cardinals, Dr. Johnson says. It should be added, that Cardinal Barberini first caused the title of eminenza to be affixed to the ecclesiasticks of this rank; in order to equal the phrase of excellency applied to sovereign princes in Italy; but the princes, upon the assumption of eminency by the cardinals, took that of highness, altezza; thus leaving the cardinals to toil after them up the hill of title in vain! The grand master of Malta had also the appellation of eminency.

E M I

The late most grievous cruelties, and most bloody slaughters perpetrated upon the inhabitants of the vallies of Piedmont, within the duke of Savoy's dominions, occasioned the writing of the enclosed letters to his majesty, and these other to your eminency.
Milton, Lett. of State, to Card. Mazarine.

EMINENT.† adj. [eminent, old Fr. eminens, Lat.]

1. High; lofty.

Thou hast built unto thee an eminent place. Ezek. xvi. 24.
Mischief, 'gainst goodness aim'd, is like a stone,
Unnaturally forc'd up an eminent hill,
Whose weight falls on our heads, and buries us.
Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

Satan, in gesture proudly eminent,

2. Dignified; exalted.

Rome for your sake shall push her conquests on,
And bring new titles home from nations won,
To dignify so eminent a son. Dryden, Juv.

3. Conspicuous; remarkable.

She is eminent for a sincere piety in the practice of religion.
Addison, Freeholder.

Eminent the mov'd
In Grecian arms, the wonder of his foes. Gloucester.

EMINENTLY. adv. [from eminent.]

1. Conspicuously; in a manner that attracts observation.

Thy love, which else
So eminently never had been known. Milton, P. L.
Lady, that in the prime of earliest youth,
Wisely hast shunn'd the broad way and the green,
And with those few art eminently seen,
That labour up the hill of heav'nly truth. Milton, Sonnet.
Such as thou hast solemnly elected,
With gifts and graces eminently adorn'd
To some great work. Milton, S. A.

2. In a high degree.

All men are equal in their judgement of what is eminently best. Dryden.
That simplicity, without which no human performance can arrive to perfection, is no where more eminently useful than in this. Swift.

EMIR.* n. s. A title of dignity among the Turks and Persians. "Mortis Ally by the Persians is called emir el memumim, i. e. prince of the faithful." Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 268. "Amir or emir ul onra, a lord of lords or chief of the nobles." Flowers of Pers. Literature, p. 7. Among the Turks, it is usually applied to the descendants of Mahomet.

We may here bring in the emirs into the number of religious men, because they are of the race of Mahomet, who for distinction sake wear about their heads turbans of a deep sea-green. Ricaut.

EMISSARY.† n. s. [emissarius, Lat. Dr. Johnson has, under the first definition, given the passage from B. Jonson, which I cite to illustrate the word as an adjective.]

1. One sent out on private messages; a spy; a secret agent.

Clifford, an emissary and spy of the king's, fled over into Flanders with his privacy. Bacon, Hen. VII.
The Jesuits send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several sects amongst us. Swift.

2. One that emits or sends out. A technical sense.

Wherever there are emissaries, there are absorbent vessels in the skin; and, by the absorbent vessels, mercury will pass into the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

E M M

EMISSARY.* adj. [adopted from the Latin emissarius, which is applied by Plautus to the eye, as the reverend Mr. Whalley long since observed on the passage in B. Jonson; and which, he might have added, is literally adopted by a better writer than the facetious bard. See EMISSARIOUS.] Looking about; prying.

You shall neither eat nor sleep,
No, nor forth your window peep,
With your emissary eye,
To fetch in the forms go by. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

EMISSION. n. s. [emissio, Lat.] The act of sending out; vent.

Tickling causeth laughter: the cause may be the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath by a flight from titillation. Bacon.

Populosity necessarily requireth transmigration and emission of colonies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Cover them with glasses; but upon all warm and benign emissions of the sun, and sweet showers, give them air. Evelyn.
Affection, in the state of innocence, was happily pitched upon its right object; it flamed up in direct fervours of devotion to God, and in collateral emissions of charity to its neighbour. South.

EMISSARIOUS.* adj. [Lat. emissarius.] Prying; narrowly examining.

Malicious mass-priest, cast back those emissitious eyes to your own infamous chair of Rome.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 184.

TO EMIT.† v. a. [emitto, Lat.]

1. To send forth; to let go; to give vent to.

These baths continually emit a manifest and very sensible heat; nay, some of them, at some times, send forth an actual and visible flame. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The soil being fruitful and rich, emits steams consisting of volatile and active parts. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. To let fly; to dart.

Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Lest, wrathful, the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

3. To issue out juridically.

That a citation be valid, it ought to be decreed and emitted by the judges' authority, and at the instance of the party. Ayliffe.

By this Act of Uniformity, there was an end put to all the liberty and licence which had been practised in all churches from the time of his majesty's return, and by his declaration that he had emitted afterwards. Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 296.

EMMENAGOGUES. n. s. [ἐμμήνια and ἄγω.] Medicines that promote the courses, either by giving a greater force to the blood in its circulation, or by making it thinner. Quincy.

Emmenagogues are such as produce a plethora, or fulness of the vessels, consequently, such as strengthen the organs of digestion, so as to make good blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EMMET.† n. s. [æmette, Saxon. Formerly written emote. "The emote or ant." Barret, Dict. 1580. From the Saxon word, æmt is conjectured to have been formed; and then ænt, whence ant. See ANT.] An ant; a pismire.

When cedars to the ground fall down by the weight of an emmet,
Or when a rich ruby's just price be the worth of a walnut. Sidney.

First crept

The parsimonious emmet, provident
Of future. Milton, P. L.

TO EMMET. v. a. [from mew.] To mew or coop up.

E M P

This outward sainted deputy,
Whose settl'd visage and deliberate word,
Nips youth i' the head, and follies doth emmove,
As falcon doth a fowl, is yet a devil. Shakespeare.

To EMMO'VE.† v. a. [emmouvoir, Fr.] To excite; to rouse; to put into emotion. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing the first of the examples from Spenser. But it was not overlooked in later times by Thomson, who has well employed it.

One day, when him high courage did emmove,
He pricked forth. Spenser, F. Q.

Her humblesse low —
Did much emmove his stout heroick heart. Spenser, F. Q.
Ten thousand throats that, from the flowering thorn,
Hymn their good God, and carol sweet of love;
Such grateful kindly raptures them emmove.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

EMOLLIENT. adj. [emolliens, Lat.] Softening; suppling.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating.

Arbuthnot.

Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, so far as they relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as stimulate. Arbuthnot.

EMOLLIENTS. n. s. Such things as sheath and soften the asperities of the humours, and relax and supple the solids at the same time. Quincy.

Emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbuthnot.

EMOLLIMENT.* n. s. [Lat. emollimentum.] An assuaging. Cockeram.

EMOLLITION. n. s. [emollitio, Lat.] The act of softening.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water: the cause is, for that all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts, and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition. Bacon.

Powerful menstrua are made for its emollition, whereby it may receive the tincture of minerals. Brown.

EMOLUMENT.† n. s. [emolumentum, Lat.] profit gotten properly by grist, molendini merces; hence its general application; but the word was, in 1656, reckoned by Heylin as uncouth and unusual.] Profit; advantage.

Let them consult how politick they were, for a temporal emolument to throw away eternally. South.

Nothing gives greater satisfaction than the sense of having dispatched a great deal of business to publick emolument. Tutler.

EMOLUMENTAL.* adj. [from emolument.] Useful; yielding profit.

Who receive and promote his dictates in all that is laudable, and truly emolumental of this nature. Evelyn's Preface.

EMONGST. prep. [So written by Spenser.] Among.

The many birds of every sort,
Chaunted aloud their cheerful harmony;
And made emongst themselves a sweet consort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. Spenser, F. Q.

EMOTION. n. s. [emotion, French.] Disturbance of mind; vehemence of passion, either pleasing or painful.

I will appeal to any man who has read this poet, whether he finds not the natural emotion of the same passion in himself, which the poet describes in his feigned persons. Dryden.

Those rocks and oaks that such emotion felt,
Were rural maids whom Orpheus taught to melt. Granville.

To EMPAIR.* v. a. [Fr. empirer, to impair, imbase, or make worse." &c. Cotgrave. The orthography, therefore, is empair. In fact our old lexicographers so give the word; as Huloet and Barret. And, before them, Chaucer wrote it empeirc; by whose example Spenser was also guided; for he writes it not impair, though Dr. Johnson has cited him to sanction that spelling. However, see To IMPAIR.] To injure; to diminish.

Wend with me, that ye may see and know
How fortune will your ruin'd name repaire,
And knights of maidenhead, whose praise she would empaire. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 34.

To EMPAIR.* v. n. To become less; to grow worse.

His [land] encreased, but mine did empaire.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 8.

To EMPA'LE.† v. a. [empaler, French.]

1. To fence with a pale.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd
T' his beasts, and disforested his mind!

Empal'd himself to keep them out, not in;

Can sow, and dares trust corn, where they have been. Donac.

2. To fortify.

All that dwell near enemies empale villages, to save themselves from surprize. Raleigh, Essays.

The English empal'd themselves with their pikes, and therewith bar'd off their enemies. Hayward.

3. To enclose; to shut in.

Round about her work she did empale,
With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers. Spenser.

Keep yourselves in breath,

And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about. Shakespeare.

They have empal'd within a zodiack

The free-born sun, and keep twelve signs awake

To watch his steps; the Goat and Crab controul

And fright him back. Donac.

Thank my charms,

I now empale her in my arms. Cleveland.

Impenetrable, empal'd with circling fire,

Yet unconsum'd. Milton, P. L.

4. To put to death by spitting on a stake fixed upright.

Who can bear this, resolve to be empal'd?

His skin flend off, and roasted yet alive? Southerne.

Let them each be broken on the rack;

Then, with what life remains, empal'd and left

To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake. Addison, Cato.

Nay, I don't believe they will be contented with hanging;

they talk of empaling, or breaking on the wheel. Arbuthnot.

EMPALEMENT.* n. s. [from empale.]

1. The punishment of empaling, yet practised in Turkey. See the 4th sense of EMPALE.

2. In heraldry, a conjunction of coats of arms, paleways.

Two coats of arms, containing empalements of Cannynge, and of his friends or relations. Warton, Hist. E. Poet. ii. 154.

3. In botany, the cup or outmost part of the flower of a plant, or that encompassing the foliation of the attire. Chambers.

It [the lupine] has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterwards turns into a pod. Müller, Gard. Dict.

EMPA'NNEL. n. s. [from pannè, French.] The writing or entering the names of a jury into a parchment schedule or roll of paper, by the sheriff, which he has summoned to appear for the performance of such publick service as juries are employed in. Cowel.

Who can expect upright verdicts from such packed, corrupt juries? Why may we not be allowed to make exceptions against this so incompetent a panel. Decay of Piety.

To EMPA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To summon to serve on a jury. A law term.

I shall not need to empannel a jury of moralists or divines, every man's own breast sufficiently instructing him. Gos. of the Tongue.

EMP

To EMPA'RADISE.* So Donne, and others, improperly write the word. It is from the Italian imparadisare, and therefore Milton and others write it imparadise. See To IMPARADISE.

To EMPA'RK.* v. a. [old French emparcher, "enformer dans un parc," Roquefort; "emparcher, to impound," Cotgrave.] To enclose as with a fence or pale; to shut in.

The wild boar of the forest, wilder than the wilderness itself, that will not be held nor emparked within any laws or limits.

Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614,) p. 32.

EMPA'RLANCE.† n. s. [from parler, French.]

1. It signifieth, in common law, a desire or petition in court of a day to pause what is best to do; and it is sometimes used for the conference of a jury in the cause committed to them. Cowel.

2. Parley. Obsolete.

That damzell loudly him bespake,
And shew'd that with his lord she would emparlaunce make.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 50.

EMPA'SM. n. s. [εμψασω]. A powder to correct the bad scent of the body.

To EMPA'SSION.† v. a. [from passion.] To move with passion; to affect strongly; to throw off from equanimity.

Unto my eyes strange shows presented were,
Picturing that which I in mind embrac'd,
That yet those sights empassion me full near. Spenser.

Bring empassioned more effectually with the death, blood-shed, and bitter passion of our Saviour, when we see that story fully and lively represented unto us in colours or work by a skilful hand, Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 254.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all empassion'd, thus began. Milton, P. I.

EMPA'SSIONATE.* adj. [from empassion.] Strongly affected. In some editions of Spenser, this expressive word is unwarrantably converted into compassionate.

On the contrary part,
Rose many advocates for her to plead:—
And lastly Grief did plead, and many tears fourth pour.
With the near touch whereof in tender heart
The Briton Prince was sore empassionate,
And woe inclined much unto her part.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 46.

To EMPA'ST.* See To IMPAST.

To EMPEA'CH.* v. a. [Fr. empescher. Minshew, under impeach, gives the two senses of accuse and hinder; and so does Dr. Johnson, who, in the very first example cited by him, has converted empeach into impeach. It is the first of the following passages in Spenser. But some editors have, in several places of that poet, taken this unwarrantable liberty. The word, in the present sense, should perhaps be always written empeach. See To IMPEACH.] To hinder; to oppose.

That he be not endomaged or empeached by his adversaries.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.

There was no bar to stop, nor foe him to empeach.
Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 34.

Such superfluities they would despise,
Which with sad cares empeach our native joys.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 15.

EMPE'RAL.* adj. See EMPE'RIC.

To EMPE'OPLE. v. a. [from people.] To form into a people or community.

He wonder'd much and gan enquire
What stately building durst so high extend
Her lofty towers unto the starry sphere,
And what unknown nation there empeopled were? Spenser.

EMP

EMPERESS.† n. s. [from emperour, now written empress, Dr. Johnson says. Our word, however, is the old French empereis, emperix; thus, at its introduction by Chaucer, "as any lady, empeice, or queen," Wife of Bath's Tale.]

1. A woman invested with imperial power.

Long, long, may you on earth our emperess reign,
Ere you in heaven a glorious angel stand. Davies.

2. The wife of an emperour.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart. Tit. Andron.

To EMPE'RIL.* v. a. [from peril.] To endanger.

His person to emperil so in fight. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 10.

EMPE'RISHED.* part. adj. [so written by Spenser; yet we write imperishable from the French imperissable.] Decayed; perished; destroyed.

I deem thy brain emperished be Through rusty eld, that hath rotted thee.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

EMPEROUR. n. s. [empereur, French; imperator, Lat.] A monarch of title and dignity superiour to a king; as the emperour of Germany.

Charles the emperour,

Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
Makes visitation. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

EMPERY.† n. s. [empere, old French; imperium, Latin.] Empire; sovereignty; dominion. A word out of use.

A lady

So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,
Would make the greatest king double. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own. Shakspeare.

EMPHASIS. n. s. [ἐμφασις, Gr.] A remarkable stress laid upon a word or sentence; particular force impressed by style or pronunciation.

O, that brave Cæsar!

—Be chok'd with such another emphasis. Shakspeare.

Emphasis not so much regards the time as a certain grandeur, whereby some letter, syllable, word, or sentence is rendered more remarkable than the rest, by a more vigorous pronunciation, and a longer stay upon it. Holder.

These questions have force and emphasis, if they be understood of the antediluvian earth. Burnet, Theory.

EMPHATICAL.† } adj. [ἐμφανίζω, Gr. to appear, emphastiqué, old Fr. emphatique, modern. Cotgrave renders the word by the English "emphastical, spoken or done with an emphasis;" but Cockeram, his contemporary, gives emphatical, as meaning "that which is uttered with most express signification." The expression is adopted from the term, as applied by the ancient philosophers, to those colours which are apparent in clouds before the rising or after the setting of the sun, or in the rainbow. See the second definition.]

1. Foreible; strong; striking.
When the mind is once drooping, things which before passed away as matters of course and casualty, are now drawn within the compass of passages and emphatical evils.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 28.

Where he endeavours to dissuade from carnivorous appetites, how emphatical is his reasoning!
In proper and emphastick terms, thou didst paint the blazing comet's fiery tail. Arbutnot, John Bull.

2. Striking the sight.
It is commonly granted that emphatical colours are light itself, modified by refractions. Boyle on Colours.

EMPHATICALLY. adv. [from emphatical.]

1. Strongly; forcibly; in a striking manner.

How emphatically and divinely does every word proclaim the truth that I have been speaking of! South.

2. According to appearance.

What is delivered of the incurvy of dolphins, must be taken emphatically, not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again. Brown.

EMPHYSEMA. n. s. [ἔμφυσημα.]

Emphysema is a light puffy humour, easily yielding to the pressure of the finger, arising again in the instant you take it off. Wiseman.

EMPHYSEMATOUS. adj. [ἔμφυσημα, Gr.] Bloated; puffed up; swollen.

The signs of a gangrene are these: the inflammation loses its redness, and becomes dusky and livid; the tenseness of the skin goes off, and feels to the touch flabby or emphysematous; and vesications, filled with ichor of different colours, spread all over it. Sharp, Surgery.

TO EMPIERCE. v. a. [from pierce.] To pierce into; to enter into by violent appulse.

The weapon bright,
Taking advantage of his open jaw,
Ran through his mouth with so importune might,
That deep empierc'd his darksome hollow maw.

Spenser, F. Q.

EMPI'GHT. preterite and part. from To pight, or pitch. [See PITCH.] Set; fixed; fastened.

But he was wary, and, ere it empight
In the meant mark, advanc'd his shield atween.

Spenser, F. Q.

EMPIRE. n. s. [empire, Sax. empire, Fr. impèrium, Lat.]

1. Imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgement sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit.

Rowe.

2. The region over which dominion is extended.

A nation extended over vast tracts of land, and numbers of people, arrives in time at the ancient name of kingdom, or modern of empire.

Temple.

Sextus Pompeius

Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands

The empire of the sea. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Command over any thing.

EMPI'RICK. n. s. [ἐμπιρικῆς, Gr.] This word seems to have been pronounced empirick by Milton, and empirick by Dryden. Milton's pronunciation is to be preferred. So far Dr. Johnson. It may be added that the word was formerly written, improperly, emperick; long before Dryden's time, as in the Proceedings against the Jesuit Garnet, 1606, &c. whence perhaps the accent on the first syllable of the word, which, however, is not peculiar to Dryden; for Shakspeare uses it. But it is not to be defended. The etymon is the Gr. πειρα, experiment; whence our word was originally empeirall, and the quacks were called "empeirall practicks, who use the medicines which they call narcotically, &c." Harmer's Transl. of Beza, 1587, p. 421. Hence also the Fr. empirique.]

1. One of a sect of the ancient physicians, who formed for themselves rules and methods on their own practice and experience, and not on any knowledge of natural causes, or the study of good authors.

Galen mentions in his time but three sects of physicians; Empiricks, [Empiricks], Methodists, and Dogmaticks.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 244.

2. A trier; an experimenter; a quack; such persons as have no true education in, or knowledge of, physical practice, but venture upon hearsay and observation only.

Quincy.

The name of Hippocrates was more effectual to persuade such men as Galen, than to move a silly empirick.

Hooker

To prostitute our past-cure malady

To empiricks; or to disserve so

Our great self and our credit.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

That every plant might receive a name, according unto the diseases it cureth, was the wish of Paracelsus; a way more likely to multiply empiricks than herbalists.

Brown.

Such an aversion and contempt for all manner of innovators, as physicians are apt to have for empiricks, or lawyers for pettifoggers.

Swift.

The illiterate writer, emp'rick-like applies

To each disease unsafe chance remedies;

The learn'd in school, whence science first began,

Studies with care the anatomy of man.

Dryden.

EMPI'RICAL. n. s. [adj. [from the noun.]]

EMPI'RICK.

1. Versed in experiments.

By fire

Of sooty coal, the empirick alchymist

Can turn, or holds it possible to turn,

Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold.

Milton, P. L.

2. Known only by experience; practised only by rote, without rational grounds.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick to this preservative.

Shakspeare.

No popular empirical means so probable.

Hammond, Works, iv. 484.

In extremes, bold counsels are the best;

Like empirick remedies, they last are try'd,

And by the event condemn'd or justify'd.

Dryden.

EMPI'RICALY. adv. [from empirical.]

1. Experimentally; according to experience.

We shall empirically and sensibly deduct the causes of blackness from originals, by which we generally observe things denigrated.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Without rational ground; charlatanically; in the manner of quacks.

EMPI'RICISM. n. s. [from empirick. Fr. empiricisme.]

Dependence on experience without knowledge or art; quackery.

Paracelsus was the father of empiricism.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iv. 21.

More empiricism without some foundation in nature.

Pownall on Antiq. p. 152.

EMPLA'STER. n. s. [ἐμπλαστρον, Gr.] This word is now always pronounced, and generally written, plaster.] An application to a sore of an oleaginous or viscous substance, spread upon cloth. See PLASTER.

Let us lay on the sovereign emplasters of the most precious and meritorious mercy of our Blessed Redeemer.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 79.

All emplasters, applied to the breasts, ought to have a hole for the nipples.

Wiseman, Surgery.

TO EMPLA'STER. v. a. [Fr. emplastrer; from ἐμπλαστρον. One of our oldest verbs.] To cover with a plaster; figuratively, to hide.

Faire as ye his name emplastre,

He was a lechour, and an idolastre.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

They must be cut out to the quick, and the sores emplastered with tar.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

EMPLA'STICK. adj. [ἐμπλαστικῆς, Gr.] Viscous; glutinous; fit to be applied as a plaster.

Resin, by its emplastick quality, mixed with oil of roses perfects the concoction.

Wiseman, Surgery.

EMP

Emplastick applications are not sufficient to defend a wound from the air. Arbutnot on Air.

To EMPLEA'D.† v. a. [old Fr. emplaidier.] To indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.

To terrify and torture them, their tyrannous masters did often emplead, arrest, cast them into prison, and thereby consume them to worse than nothing. Hayward.

Antiquity thought thunder the immediate voice of Jupiter, and empleaded them of impiety that referred it to natural casualties. Glanville, Scepstis.

Since none the living villains dare emplead, Arraign them in the persons of the dead. Dryden, Juv.

To EMPLOY. v. a. [emploier, Fr.]

1. To busy; to keep at work; to exercise. It is used both as agent; as, the king employed the minister; or cause, as, the publick credit employed the minister.

For thrice, at least, in compass of the year, Thy vineyard must employ the sturdy steer To turn the glebe. Dryden, Virg.

2. In the following quotations it is used with in, about, to, and upon, before the object. To seems less proper.

Their principal learning was applied to the course of the stars, and the rest was employed in displaying the brave exploits of their princes. Temple.

Our reason is often puzzled, because of the imperfection of the ideas it is employed about. Locke.

The proper business of the understanding is not that which men always employ it to. Locke.

Labour in the beginning gave a right of property, where ever any one was pleased to employ it upon what was common. Locke.

On the happy change, the boy Employ'd his wonder and his joy. Prior.

This is a day in which the thoughts of our countrymen ought to be employed on serious subjects. Addison, Freeholder.

3. To use as an instrument.

The cleanly cheese-press she could never turn, Her awkward fist did ne'er employ the churn. Gay, Past.

4. To use as means.

The money was employed to the making of galleys. 2 Mac. iv. 20.

Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise; And war more force, but not more pains employs. Dryden.

5. To use as materials.

The labour of those who felled and framed the timber employed about the plough, must be charged on labour. Locke.

6. To commission; to intrust with the management of any affairs.

Jonathan and Jahaziah were employed about this matter. Ezra, x. 15.

Jesus Christ is furnished with superiour powers to the angels, because he is employed in superiour works, and appointed to be the Sovereign Lord of all the visible and invisible worlds. Watts.

7. To fill up with business.

If you're idle you're destroy'd; All his force on you he tries, Be but watchful and employ'd, Soon the baffled tempter flies. Molleur, Don Quixote.

To study nature will thy time employ; Knowledge and innocence are perfect joy. Dryden.

8. To pass or spend in business.

Why, whilst we struggle in this vale benenth, With want and sorrow, with disease and death, Do they more bless'd perpetual life employ In songs of pleasure, and in scenes of joy? Prior.

EMPLOY.† n. s. [Fr. emploi.]

EMPO'RIUM.† n. s. [ἐμπορίον, Gr. Of much older authority than that of Dryden, the earliest example of the word given by Dr. Johnson; and used also in the plural, which had escaped notice.] A place of merchandize; a mart; a town of trade; a commercial city.

No village shall stand above six, seven, or eight miles from a city, except those emporiums which are by the sea side, general staples, marts, as Antwerp, Venice, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 61.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,
That those who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast. Dryden.

I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those instances of charity. Atterbury.

TO EMPOVERISH. v. a. [pauvre, French.]

1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.

Since they might talk better as they lay together, they empoverish their clothes to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney.

Your's sounds aloud, and tells us you excel
No less in courage than in singing well;
While, unconcern'd, you let your country know,
They have empoverish'd themselves, not you. Waller.

For sense of honour, if it empoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South.

Fresh roses bring,
To strow my bed, till the empoverish'd spring
Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility; as, tillage impoverishes land.

EMPOVERISHER. n. s. [from impoverish.]

1. One that makes others poor.
2. That which impairs fertility.

They destroy the weeds, and fit the land for after-crops, being an improver, and not an empoverisher of land. Mortimer.

EMPOVERISHMENT. n. s. [from impoverish.] De-pauperation; cause of poverty; drain of wealth.

Being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great burden unto her, nor any great empoverishment to her coffers. Spenser on Ireland.

All appeals for justice, or appellations for favour or preferment to another country, are so many grievous empoverishments. Swift, View of Ireland.

TO EMPO'WER. v. a. [from power.]

1. To authorize; to commission; to give power or authority to any purpose.

You are empowered, when you please, to give the final decision of wit. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

The government shall be empowered to grant commissions to all Protestants whatsoever. Swift.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Baker on Learning.

EMPRESS. n. s. [contracted from emperess, which is retained by Jonson in the following lines.]

1. The wife of an emperor.

Let your nimble feet
Tread subtle circles that may always meet
In point to him; and figures, to express
The grace of him, and his great emperess. B. Jonson.

2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton, P. L.
Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden.

Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;
Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:
Yet this great empress of the human soul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If restless passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey. Prior.

EMPRISE.† n. s. [emprise, French. This abbreviation of enterprise was introduced into our language by Chaucer. The Spanish thus use empresa, and the Italians impresa.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise.

Noble minds, of yore, allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Spenser, F. Q.

A double conquest must you make,
If you atchieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars;
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise. Milton, P. L.

Thus, till the sun had travell'd half the skies,
Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise. Pope, Odyssey.

TO EMPRI'SON.* v. a. [Fr. emprisonner, Lacombe.]

To put in prison. Yet our word is almost uniformly written imprison. See TO IMPRISON.

EMPTIER.† n. s. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches. Nahum, ii. 2.

Hail, hail, plump paunch, O the founder of taste,
For fresh meats, or powder'd, or pickle, or paste,
Devourer of broil'd, bak'd, roasted, or sod;
And emptier of cups, be they even or odd. B. Jonson, Masques.

EMPTINESS. n. s. [from empty.]

1. Absence of plenitude; inanity.

Where cities stood,
Well fenc'd, and numerous, desolation reigns,
And emptiness; dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,
The widow and the orphan stroll. Philips.

2. The state of being empty.

His coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.

Nor could another in your room have been,
Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden.

The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance. Bentley.

4. Want of substance or solidity.

'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble, and to subsist in the emptiness of light and shadow. Dryden, Dufrenoy, Pref.

5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.

O frail estate of human things,
Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.
Form the judgement about the worth or emptiness of things here, according as they are or are not of use, in relation to what is to come after. Atterbury.

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

EMPTION.† n. s. [emption, old French; emptio, Lat.]

The act of purchasing; a purchase.

There is a dispute among the lawyers, whether Glaucus his exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of Tydides, was emption or commutation. Arbuthnot on Coins.

EMPTY. adj. [emrig, Saxon.]

1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The pit was empty, there was no water in it. Gen. xxxvii.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that; there still remains one vessel empty. Burnet, Theory.

2. Evacuated; no longer full.

Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Devoid; unfurnished.

EMP

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakespeare.

Mr. Boyle has shewed, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton.

4. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.
Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise. Pope.

5. Without any thing to carry; unburthened; unfreighted.

They beat him, and sent him away empty. St. Mark, xii. 3.
When ye go, ye shall not go empty. Exodus, iii. 21.

He alleges that the satyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger satyrs? Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

Yet all the little that I got, I spent;
And still return'd as empty as I went. Dryden, Virg.

6. Hungry.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.

7. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful; unfurnished with materials for thought.

How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and empty headed fools! Raleigh.

His answer is a handsome way of exposing an empty, trifling, pretending pedant; the wit lively, the satire courtly and severe. Felton on the Classics.

8. Unfruitful; barren.
Seven empty ears blasted with the east wind. Genesis, xli. 27.

Israel is an empty vine. Hosea, x. 1.

9. Wanting substance; wanting solidity; vain.
The god of sleep there hides his heavy head,
And empty dreams on every leaf are spread. Dryden, Æn.

To EMPTV.† v. a. [Sax. emptican.] To evacuate; to exhaust; to deprive of that which was contained in it.

Boundless intemperance,
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches. Nahum, ii. 2.

Sheep are often blind by fulness of blood: cut their tails, and empty them of their blood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The Euxine sea is conveniently situated for trade, by the communication it has both with Asia and Europe, and the great navigable rivers that empty themselves into it. Arbuthnot.

To EMPTY.* v. n. To become empty.
The chapel empties; and thou may'st be gone
Now, Sun. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To EMPURPLE.† v. a. [Ital. incorporare; and Milton writes our word with im, though Spenser writes it em.] To make of a purple colour; to discolour with purple.

Of from the Forrest wildings he did bring,
Whose sides empurpled were with smiling red. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 17.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,

The deep,
Empurpled ran, with gushing gore distain'd. Philips.

EMPUSE.* n. s. [Lat. empusa; Gr. ἐμψυσα.] A phantom; a spectre.

It were well if the exorcist would rail upon, mock, and jeer at the devil; for he cannot endure a witty and a sharp taunt, and loves jeering and railing no more than he loves holy water; and this was well tried of old against an empuse that met Apollonius Tyanæus at mount Caucasus, against whom he railed, and exhorted his company to do so.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

A painted lady is to be looked upon rather as some spectre, or empusa, than as a handsome woman.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Ilandson. p. 107.

EMP

To EMPURZLE. v. a. [from puzzle.] To perplex; to put to a stand.

It hath empuzzled the enquiries of others to apprehend, and enforced them into strange conceptions to make out. Broun.

EMPYEMA. n. s. [ἐμψύμα.] A collection of purulent matter in any part whatsoever; generally used to signify that in the cavity of the breast only, and which sometimes happens upon the opening of abscesses, or ulcerations of the lungs, or membranes inclosing the breast. Quincy.

An empyema, or a collection of purulent matter in the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impel the patient into a phthisical consumption. Harvey.

There is likewise a consumption from an empyema, after an inflammation of the lungs; which may be known from a weight upon the diaphragm, oppression of the lungs, a difficulty of breathing, and inability to lie on one side, which is that which is sound. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EMPYREAL.† adj. [ἐμψυγος, Greek; empyreco, Ital. Dante.] Formed of the element of fire; refined beyond aerial; pertaining to the highest and purest region of heaven. Tickell accents it on the penult. The word is not wholly poetical, as Dr. Johnson's examples might lead the reader to suppose; nor is Milton, whose authority is the earliest of those cited by him, the coiner of it.

It is easy to say much in exalting this happy state of solitude, all the space between earth and the empyreal heaven, the seat of the blessed, being the scope we have to extend our thoughts upon. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. (1648,) P. i. p. 321.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold

Go, soar with Plato to th' empyreal sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair. Pope.
But empyreal forms, howe'er in fight
Gash'd and dismember'd, easily unite. Tickell.

EMPYREAN.† n. s. [ἐμψυγος, Gr. empyrée, French. Crashaw uses it in the Latin form of empyreum.] The highest heaven where the pure element of fire is supposed to subsist.

Through all the spheres
Of musick's heaven; and seat it there on high
In th' empyreum of pure harmony. Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

The Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean, where he sits
High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye. Milton, P. L.

Under his burning wheels
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton, P. L.

The empyrean rung
With hallelujahs. Milton, P. L.

EMPYREAN.* adj. Empyrean.
The clouds,
Disparting wide in midway sky, withdrew
Their airy veil, and left a bright expanse
Of empyrean flame. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

EMPYREUM. } n. s. [ἐμψύρευμα.] The burning to EMPYREUMA. } of any matter in boiling or distil-lution, which gives a particular offensive smell. Quincy.

It is so far from admitting an empyreum, that it burns clear away without leaving any cinders, or dust about it. Harvey.

The hopes of an elixir insensibly evaporate, and vanish to air, or leave in the recipient a foul empyreuma. Decay of Piety.

EMPYREUMATICAL. adj. [from empyreuma.] Having the smell or taste of burnt substances.

Empyreumatical oils, distilled by strong fires in retorts, may be brought to emulate essential oils drawn in limicks. Boyle.

EMPYREUMATICK.* adj. Having the taste or smell of burnt substances.

EMU

It [the whisky] was strong, but not pungent, and was free from the emphyreumatick taste or smell.

Johnson, Journey to the W. Islands.

EMPHYRICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐμψυρος.] Containing the combustible principle of coal.

Of these and some other emphyric marks, I shall say no more, as they do not tell us the defects of the soils.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 81.

EMPHYROSIS. n. s. [ἐμψυγός.] Conflagration; general fire.

The former opinion that held these cataclisms and emphyroses universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, especially that of conflagration.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO EMULATE.† v. a. [emulor, Latin; from ἀμιλλα, Gr. a combat, a dispute.]

1. To rival; to propose as one to be equalled or excelled.

2. To imitate with hope of equality, or superiour excellence.

I would have

Him emulate you: 'tis no shame to follow

The better precedent.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Those fair ideas to my aid I'll call,

And emulate my great original.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,

Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face.

Pope.

3. To be equal to; to rise to equality with.

I see how thy eye would emulate the diamond.

Shakespeare.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,

No kitchens emulate the vestal fire.

Pope.

4. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

It is likewise attended with a delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating this motion.

Arbuthnot.

EMULATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Ambitious; desirous to rival or excel.

Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

EMULATION.† n. s. [æmulatîo, Lat.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation

Hath not that honour in't it had; for where

I thought to crush him in an equal force,

True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,

Or wrath or craft may get him.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them.

1 Mac. viii. 16.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds.

Sprat.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor saints at Jerusalem.

South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,

And your own fame now rebs you of your rest:

Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,

As bodjes nourish'd with resembling food.

Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another; contest; contention; discord.

Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife.

Galat. v. 20.

What madness rules in brainsick men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause,

Such factious emulations shall arise!

Shakespeare.

EMULATIVE.† adj. [from emulate.] Inclined to emulation; rivalling; disposed to competition.

Nor can a fairer kindred title move

His emulative age to glory's love

Than Edward, laureate prince.

T. Warton, Verses on the Birth of the Prince of Wales, 1762.

EMULATOR.† n. s. [old Fr. émulateur; Lat. æmulator.] A rival; a competitor; "one who envies another."

Huloet.

EMU

In superiours it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors and emulators asleep.

Bacon, Essays.

I'll tell thee, Charles; it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

A youth at first despised and slighted by the experience and haughtiness of his jealous emulators; but after bowed and kneeled to, by all that drew breath under the wing of the Roman Eagle.

Fellham, Res. ii. 85.

Shenaar, signifieth, Dens Æmuli, the tongue of the envious, or emulator, the same with Dens Theoninus.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 444.

EMULATRESS.* n. s. [from emulator.] She who is desirous to equal or excel.

Historiographers should be very precise, true, and unpassionate; neither profit or fear, rancour or affection, should make them to tread awry from the truth, whose mother is history; the emulatrix of time, the depository of actions, the witness of things past, and advertiser of things to come,

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. p. 16.

TO EMULE.† v. a. [emulor, Latin.] To emulate.

Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. One of his contemporaries, however, thought it worthy to be revived.

He, sitting me beside in that same shade,

Provoked me to play some pleasant fit; —

Yet, emuling my pipe, he took in hand

My pipe, before that emuled of many,

And plaid thereon; for well that skill he cond.

Spenser, Colin Clout.

Whom emuling I deftly learn'd to sing.

Edwards, Sonnet, Canons of Crit. (1758), p. 296.

TO EMULGE. v. a. [emulgeo, Lat.] To milk out.

EMULGENT. adj. [emulgens, Lat.]

1. Milking or draining out.

2. Emulgent vessels [in anatomy] are the two large arteries and veins which arise, the former from the descending trunk of the aorta, or great artery; the latter from the vena cava. They are both inserted into the kidneys; the emulgent arteries carrying blood with the serum to them, and the emulgent veins bringing it back again, after the serum has been separated therefrom by the kidneys.

Harris.

It doth furnish the left emulgent with one vein.

Brown.

Through the emulgent branches the blood is brought to the kidneys, and is there freed of its serum.

Cheyne.

EMULOUS.† adj. [æmulus, Lat.]

1. Rivalling; engaged in competition.

What the Gaul or Moor could not effect,

Nor emulous Carthage, with their length of spite,

Shall be the work of one.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Like emulous courtiers, that gape and vie for the next preferment.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

One of those great controversies which were agitated between the emulous schools of Sammai and Hillel.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

May we live so far

From difference, or emulous competition,

That all the world may say, although two bodies,

We have one mind.

Beaumont and Fl. The Protheus.

She is in perpetual diffidence, or actual enmity with her, but always emulous and suspectful of her.

Hopwell, Voc. Forest.

2. Desirous of superiority; desirous to rise above another; desirous of any excellence possessed by another: with of before the object of emulation.

By strength

They measure all, of other excellence

Not emulous, nor care who then excels.

Milton, P. I.

By fair rewards our noble youth we raise

To emulous merit, and to thirst of praise.

Prior.

Good Howard, emulous of the Grecian art.

Prior.

3. Factious; contentious.

Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

EMULOUSLY. † adv. [from emulous.] With desire of excell'ing or outgoing another.

So tempt they him, and emulously vie
To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy. Granville.

Of friendship's fairest fruits, the fruit most fair
Is virtue kindling at a rival fire,
And, emulously, rapid in her race. Young, Night Th. 2.

EMULSION. n. s. [emulsio, Lat.] A form of medicine, by bruising oily seeds and kernels, and drawing out their substances with some liquor, that thereby becomes milky. Quincy.

The aliment is dissolved by an operation resembling that of making an emulsion; in which operation the oily parts of nuts and seeds, being gently ground in a marble mortar, and gradually mixed with some watery liquor, or dissolved into a sweet, thick, turbid, milky liquor, resembling the chyle in an animal body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EMUNCTORIES. n. s. [emuntorium, Latin.] Those parts of the body where any thing excrementitious is separated and collected, to be in readiness for ejection. Quincy.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body unto their proper emuntories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

There are receptacles in the body of man, and emuntories to drain them of superfluous choler. More against Atheism.

Discoursing of the lungs, I shew that they are the grand emuncory of the body; that the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The regimen in quinsies, which proceed from an obstruction of the glands, must be to use such warm liquors as relax those glands, such as, by stimulating, open the emuntories to secrete the humour. Arbuthnot on Dict.

EMUSCATION.* n. s. [from emuscor, Lat.] The act of clearing from moss.

The most infallible art of emuscation is taking away the cause by dressing with lime. Evelyn, ii. vii. § 8.

EN. † An inseparable particle borrowed by us from the French, and by the French formed from the Latin in. Many words are uncertainly written with en or in. In many words en is changed into em for more easy pronunciation.

The uncertainty, which Dr. Johnson notices, in respect to en and in, might be removed, if due attention were paid to the derivation. Thus, as entire is admitted to be derived from the French entier, the form of intire should not be observed; thus enquire, as being from the French enquiere, seems preferable to inquire from the Latin inquiro; and enclase, from the French enclos, to the Latin inclusus; while, on the other hand, include is directly from the Latin include.

EN.* The plural number, in our old language, of the verb, as, I escape, they escapen.

To ENABLE. † v. a. [from able; old Fr. enhabler.] But see ABLE. To make able; to empower; to supply with strength or ability.

If thou would'st vouchsafe to overspread
Me with the shadow of thy gentle wing,
I should enabled be thy acts to sing. Spenser, Hymn on Love.

I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry. 1 Tim. i. 12.

His great friendship with God might enable him, and his compassion might incline him. Atterbury.

He points out to him the way of life, strengthens his weakness, restores his lapses, and enables him to walk and persevere in it. Rogers.

ENABLEMENT.* n. s. [from enable.] Ability; power to do a thing.

They owe much of these furtherances and enablenents to the civil discipline and politick literature of courts.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648.) p. 118.

To ENACT. v. a. [from act.]

1. To act; to perform; to effect. Not now in use.
In true balancing of justice, it is flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted. Spenser on Ireland.

Valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance. Shakespeare.

2. To establish by law; to decree.

It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien,
He speaks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shakespeare.

The senate were authors of all counsels in the state; and what was by them consulted and agreed, was proposed to the people, by whom it was enacted or commanded. Temple.

3. To represent by action.

I did enact Hector. Shakespeare.

ENACT. n. s. [from the verb.] Purpose; determination.

ENACTOR. † n. s. [from enact.] In Sherwood's old Dictionary, it is enacter.]

1. One that forms decrees, or establishes laws.

The great Author of our nature, and enactor of this law of good and evil, is highly dishonoured. Atterbury.

2. One who practises or performs any thing. Not used.

The violence of either grief or joy,
Their own enactors with themselves destroy. Shakespeare.

ENACTURE.* n. s. [from enact.] Many editions read enactors in the following line of Shakespeare.] Purpose; determination; decree.

What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose:
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures with themselves destroy.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

ENALLAGE. † n. s. [ἐναλλαγή.] A figure in grammar, whereby some change is made of the common modes of speech, as when one mood or tense of a verb is put for another.

Beza is pleased to blame this version, saying it was an harsh enallage, forgetting himself, I suppose, that with the Greeks the participle is frequently put for the infinitive with words that signify any affection of the mind.

Anditchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 253.

To ENAMBUSH. v. a. [from ambush.] To hide in ambush; to hide with hostile intention.

They went within a vale, close to a flood, whose stream
Us'd to give all their cattle drink, they there enam bush'd them. Chapman's Iliad.

To ENAMEL. v. a. [from amel. See AMEL.]

1. To inlay; to variegate with colours, properly with colours fixed by fire.

Must I, alas!

Frame and enamel plate, and drink in glass? Donne.

See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona crown'd;

Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd ground. Pope.

I bequeath to the earl of Orrery the enamelled silver plates, to distinguish bottles of wine by. Swift's Last Will.

2. To lay upon another body so as to vary it.

Higher than that wall, a circling row
Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
Blossoms, and fruits at once of golden hue,

To ENAMEL. v. n. To practise the use of enamel.

Though it were foolish to colour or enamel upon the glasses of telescopes, yet to gild the tubes of them may render them more acceptable to the users, without lessening the clearness of the object.

ENAM'EL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing enamelled, or variegated with colours fixed by fire.

Down from her eyes welled the pearls round,
Upon the bright enamel of her face;

Such honey drops on springing flowers are found,
When Phœbus holds the crimson morn in chase.

There are various sorts of coloured glasses, pastes, enamels, and factitious gems.

2. The substance inlaid in other things.

ENAM'ELLER.† n. s. [from enamel.] One that practises the art of enamelling; encaustes, Lat.

ENAM'ELLING.* n. s. [from enamel.] The art of applying enamels on metals.

The colouring of furs; enameling, and anealing.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 286.

To ENAM'OUR.† v. a. [from amour, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old French verb enamourer; upon the participle of which, enamouré, Lacombe makes this observation: "qui est devenu tout-à-coup amoureux d'une femme: Les Anglois se servent de cette expression." It is originally from the Latin amare.] To inflame with love; to make fond: often with of before the thing or person loved.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

My Oberon! What visions have I seen!

I thought I was enamour'd of an ass.

You are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero.

Or should she, confident,

As sitting queen ador'd on beauty's throne,

Descend with all her winning charms begirt,

To enamour, as the zone of Venus once

Wrought that effect on Jove, so fables tell.

He, on his side,

Leaning half-raised, with looks of cordial love

Hung over her enamour'd.

Your uncle cardinal

Is not so far enamour'd of a cloyster,

But he will thank you for the crown.

'Tis hard to discern whether is in the greatest error, he who is enamoured of all he does, or he whom nothing of his own can please.

ENAMORA'DO.* n. s. [from enamour. Ital. innamorato.]

One deeply in love.

An enamorado neglects all other things to accomplish his delight.

ENARMED.* adj. [probably from the old French enarme, "anse ou courroie d'un bouclier;" Lat.

arma. V. Lacombe, Suppl. and Roq.] A term of heraldry, signifying that the horns, hoofs, beak, talons, &c. of any beast or bird of prey, being their arms or weapons, are of a different colour from that of the body. It is used, in Scottish writings, simply for armed, wearing armour; but I have not found it so employed by English authors. "He beareth this boar azure enarmyd with gold." Poem supposed to be written by Chaucer. See Illustr. of Gower and Chaucer, 1810, p. 306.

ENARRA'TION.† n. s. [enarro, Latin.] Explanation; exposition.

St. Augustine in his enarration upon this psalm, according to his wont, betakes him to an allegorical exposition.

I might further yet confirm this truth by an anatomical enar- ration of the several compounding parts of these limbs.

ENANTHRO'SIS. n. s. [en and aggein]. The insertion of one bone into another to form a joint.

Enarthrosis is where a good round head enters into a cavity, whether it be cotyla, or profound cavity, as that of os coxæ, receiving the head of the os femoris; or gleue, which is more shallow, as in the scapula, where it receives the humerus.

Wiseman, Surgery.

ENATA'TION. n. s. [enato, Latin.] The act of swimming out; escape by swimming.

ENAT'E.* adj. [Lat. enatis.] Growing out.

Osteologists have very well observed, that the parts appertaining to the bones, which stand out at a distance from their bodies, are either the adnate or the enate parts, either the Epiphyses, or the Apophyses of the bones.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 176.

To ENA'VIGATE.* v. a. [Lat. enavigo.] To sail over.

Cockram.

ENAU'NTER.† adv. [probably from anent, which see.]

The contemporary commentator on Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar explains this old word by lest that.

Anger would let him speak to the tree,

Enaunter his rage might cooled be,

But to the root bent his sturdy stroke.

ENÇÆ'NIA.* See ENCENIA.

To ENCA'GE.† v. a. [Fr. encager, to imprison; Cotgrave.] To shut up as in a cage; to coop up; to confine.

He suffer'd his kinsman March,

Who is, if every owner were right plac'd,

Indeed, his king, to be encag'd in Wales,

There without ransom to lie forfeited.

Like Bajazet encag'd, the shepherd's scoff,

Or like slack-sinew'd Sampson, his hair off.

Donne, Poems, p. 145.

And more than life I lov'd my liberty,

And much suspected all that would engage

My heart to their own sect, and free-born soul engage.

To ENCA'MP.† v. n. [from camp.] To pitch tents;

to sit down for a time in a march; to settle a temporary habitation.

He encamped at the mount of God.

On the foughten field

Michael, and his Angels prevalent,

Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round.

To ENCA'MP. v. a. To form an army into a regular camp; to order to encamp.

The people were encamped against Gibbethon.

ENCA'MPING.* n. s. The place where tents are pitched;

a camp.

In such and such a place shall be my camp, [in the margin,

encamping.]

The French knew how to make war with the English, by not putting things to the hazard of a battle, but wearing them by long sieges of towns and strong fortified encampings.

ENCA'MPMENT. n. s. [from encamp.]

1. The act of encamping, or pitching tents.

2. A camp; tents pitched in order.

Their enemies served to improve them in their encampments, weapons, or something else.

When a general bids the martial train

Spread their encampment o'er the spacious plain,

Thick rising tents a canvas city build.

To ENCA'NKER.* v. a. [from cancker.] To corrode; to corrupt.

What needeth me for to extoll his fame

With my rude pen encanker'd all with rust?

To ENCA'SE.* v. a. [from case.] To enclose or hide

as in a case or cover.

You would encase yourself, and I must credit you,
So much my old obedience compasses from me.

Ben Jon. and Fl. Little Thief.

TO ENCA'VE. † v. a. [old Fr. encaver.] To hide as in a cave.

Do but encave yourself,
And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew. Shakspeare, Othello.

ENCA'USTICE. * n. s. [Gr. ἐγκαυστική.] The art of enamelling or painting by fire. Bailey.

ENCA'USTICK. * adj. [Gr. ἐγκαυστικός, Fr. encaustique, from καίω, to burn.] Belonging to the act of painting with burnt wax; sometimes applied to enamelling. Encaustick painting was practised by the ancients, and lately revived. Chambers. "C'est une sorte de peinture, dont le secret a été retrouvé par M. Requeno, Jésuite Espagnol, et qui consiste à coucher, avec le pinceau, des cires colorées et liquéfiées au feu, ou à fixer les couleurs par le moyen du feu." Morin, Etym. Dict. Fr. et Gr.

ENCEINTE. n. s. [French; Lat. incingo.]

1. Enclosure; ground enclosed with a fortification. A military term.

2. With child. A law term.

A died without issue born, but leaving his wife enceint [encinte,] or big with child. Blackstone.

ENCENIA. * n. s. plur. [Gr. ἐγκαίνια, from καλὸς, new.] Festivals anciently kept on the days, on which cities were built; by the Jews, on which their temple was dedicated; by Christians, on which their churches were consecrated; and, in later times, ceremonies renewed at certain periods, as at Oxford, where the word signifies the solemnities at the celebrations of founders and benefactors.

The encenia, and publick collections of the university upon state subjects, were never in such esteem either for elegy or congratulation, as when he contributed most largely to them.

Oldisworth, in Johnson's Life of Smith.

TO ENCHA'FE. v. a. [cschauffer, French.] To enrage;
to irritate; to provoke.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
I never did like molestation view
On the enchafed flood. Shakspeare, Othello.

TO ENCHA'IN. v. a. [enchainer, French.]

1. To fasten with a chain; to hold in chains; to bind; to hold in bondage.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden, Virgil.

2. To link together; to concatenate.

The one contracts and enchains his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Howell.

TO ENCHANT. v. a. [enchanter, French.]

1. To give efficacy to any thing by songs of sorcery.

And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

These powerful drops thrice on the threshold pour,
And bathe with this enchanted juice her door;
That door where no admittance now is found,
But where my soul is ever hovering round. Granville.

2. To subdue by charms or spells.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

John thinks them all enchanted: he enquires if Nick had not given them some intoxicating potion. Arbuthnot.

3. To delight in a high degree.

One whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish, like enchancing harmony.

Shakspeare, L. Lark. Dost.

Too dear I priz'd a fair enchancing face;
Beauty unchaste is beauty in disgrace. Pope, Odyssey.

ENCHA'NTER. n. s. [enchanter, French.] A magician; a sorcerer; one who has spirits or demons at his command; one who has the power of charms and spells.

Such phasms, such apparitions, are excellencies which men applaud in themselves, conjured up by the magick of a strong imagination, and only seen within that circle in which the enchanter stands. Decay of Piety.

Gladio, by valour and stratagem; put to death tyrants, enchanters, monsters, and knights. Spectator.

Arden, that black enchanter, whose dire arts
Enslav'd our knights, and broke our virgin hearts. Granville.

ENCHA'NTINGLY. † adv. [from enchant.] With the force of enchantment. It is improperly used in a passive sense in the following passage of Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says. It was in use, however, for charmingly, in Shakspeare's time; as Cotgrave illustrates enchancingly by that word.

He's gentle; never school'd, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchancingly beloved.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

ENCHA'NTMENT. n. s. [enchantement, French.]

1. Magical charms; spells; incantation; sorcery.

The Turks thought that tempest was brought upon them by the charms and enchancements of the Persian magicians. Knolles.

2. Irresistible influence; overpowering delight.

Warmth of fancy will carry the loudest and most universal applause, which holds the heart of a reader under the strongest enchantment. Pope, Pref. to Iliad.

ENCHA'NTRESS. n. s. [enchanteress, French.]

1. A sorceress; a woman versed in magical arts.

Fell banning hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue. Shakspeare.
I have it by certain tradition, that it was given to the first who wore it by an enchantress. Teller.

2. A woman whose beauty or excellencies give irresistible influence.

From this enchantress all these ills are come:
You are not safe till you pronounce her doom. Dryden.
Oft with th' enchantress of his soul he talks,
Sometimes in crowds distress'd. Thomson.

TO ENCHA'RGE. * v. a. [from charge.] To intrust with; to give in charge to.

We know that the evil Spirits cannot be more full of malice to work our harm, than the blessed Angels are full of charity, and well-wishing to mankind; and the evil are only let loose to tempt us by a permission of the Almighty, whereas the good are by a gracious delegation from God encharged with our custody. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. § 8.

TO ENCHA'SE. † v. a. [enchasser, French; Gr. ἐν and κάψα, a chest or box.]

1. To infix; to enclose in any other body so as to be held fast, but not concealed.

We enchase our discourse with bitter language as with pearls, and never think we improve except we be contumelious. Hales, Rem. Serm. p. 8.

Like polish'd ivory, beauteous to behold;
Or Parian marble, when enchas'd in gold. Dryden, Virgil.

Words, which, in their natural situation, shine like jewels enchased in gold, look, when transposed into notes, as if set in lead. Fritton on the Classics.

2. To adorn by being fixed upon it.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's dindem, Enchas'd with all the honours of the world! Shakspeare.

They houses burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls which glitt'ring gems enchase. Dryden.

3. To adorn by raised or embossed work,

When was old Sherwood's head more quaintly curl'd,
Or look'd the earth more green upon the world,
Or nature's cradle more enclas'd and puri'd. B. Jonson.

4. To engrave.

A mazer yrought of the maple ware,
Wherein is enchased many a fair sight
Of bears and tigers. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.

5. To paint strongly.

My ragged rimes are all too rude and base
Her heavenly lineaments for to enchase.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 23.

ENCHE'ASON.† n. s. [old French, enchaison; Lat. occasio. Gower might be thought to have introduced this word into our language, "If that I had encheason," &c. if it did not occur in the stat. 5 Edw. III.] Cause; occasion.

Skinner, Cowel, Bailey.

Certes, said he, well mote I shame to tell
The foud encheason that me hither led. Spenser, F. Q.
ENCHIRIDION.* n. s. [Lat. enchiridium; Gr. ἐν, in, and χρῆς, the hand.] A little book, which one may carry in his hand; a manual. Bullockar.

As witnesseth Bartholinus in his enchiridion of natural philosophy. Hakevill on Providence, p. 152.

ENCINDERED.* adj. [from cinder.] Burnt to cinders. Cockeram.

To ENCIRCLE.† v. a. [old Fr. encercier.] To surround; to environ; to enclose in a ring or circle; to enring.

That stranger guest the Paphian realm obeys,
A realm defended with encircling seas. Pope, Odyssey.

Beneath the sculptur'd arch he sits enthron'd;
The peers encircling, form an awful round. Pope, Odyssey.

ENCIRCLET. n. s. [from circle.] A circle; a ring.

In whose encirclets if ye gaze,
Your eyes may tread a lover's maze. Sidney.

ENCLITICK.† n. s. [ἐγκλιτικός.] A particle which throws back the accent upon the foregoing syllable.

It is observed too often that men of wit do so much employ their thoughts upon fine speculations, that things useful to mankind are wholly neglected; and they are busy in making commendations upon some encliticks in a Greek author, while obvious things, that every man may have use for, are wholly overlooked. Taller, No. 18.

When we say, "Give me content," the me in this case is a perfect enclitick. But when we say, "Give me content, give him his thousands," the me and him are no encliticks, but, as they stand in opposition, assume an accent of their own, and so become the true ἐξοτονίμια, i. e. uprightly accented. Harris, Hermes, i. 5.

ENCLITICK.* adj. The diversity between the contractive pronouns, and the enclitick, is not unknown, even to the English tongue. When we say, Give me, &c. Harris's Herm. i. 5. See the substantive.

To ENCLOISTER.* v. a. [Fr. enclostrer, Cotgrave.] Our word should therefore be written with en, though Dr. Johnson gives it with in, without authority or example, however. Yet Lovelace, a poet of the 17th century, might have furnished him with "inchoyster," Lucasta, p. 47. But a better writer, of the same time, uses encloister. To shut up as in a cloister.

The Gentiles appropriated the name of a temple to this notion of encloistering a deity by an idol. Mede on Churches, (1638,) p. 65.

To ENCLOSE. v. a. [enclos, French.]

1. To part from things or grounds common by a fence.

The protector caused a proclamation to be set forth against enclosures, commanding that they who had enclosed lands, accustomed to be open, should lay them open again. Hayward.

As much land as a man tills, and can use the product of, so much he, by his labour, encloses from the common. Locke.
For enclosing of land, the usual way is with a bank set with quick. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To environ; to encircle; to surround; to encompass; to shut in between other things; to include.

The fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their enclosings. Ex. xxviii. 20.

The peer now spreads the glittering forlex wide,
T' enclose the lock, now joins it to divide. Pope.

3. To hold by an exclusive claim.

ENCLOSE. n. s. [from enclose.]

1. One that encloses or separates common fields in several distinct properties.

If God had laid all common, certainly Man would have been th' encloser; but since now
God hath impar'd us, on the contrary,
Mum breaks the fence. Herbert.

2. Any thing in which another is enclosed.

ENCLOSURE.† n. s. [old Fr. enclosure.]

1. The act of enclosing or environing any thing.

The membranes are for the comprehension or enclosure of all these together. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

2. The separation of common grounds into distinct possessions.

Enclosures began to be frequent, whereby arable land was turned into pasture. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Touching enclosures, a company of lands enclosed are thereby improved in worth two or three parts at the least. Hayward.

3. The appropriation of things common.

Let no man appropriate what God hath made common; that is against justice and charity, and by miraculous accidents God hath declared his displeasure against such enclosure. Bp. Taylor.

4. State of being shut up in any place; encompassed, or environed.

This expresses particularly the enclosure of the waters within the earth. Burnet, Theory.

For the young, during its enclosure in the womb, there are formed membranes enveloping it, called secundines. Ray.

5. The space enclosed; the space comprehended within certain limits.

And all, that else this world's enclosure base
Hath great or glorious in mortal eye,
Adorns the person of her majesty. Spenser, F. Q.

They are to live all in a body, and generally within the same enclosure; to marry among themselves, and to eat no meats that are not prepared their own way. Addison, Spect.

6. Several; ground enclosed; ground separated from the common.

'Tis not the common, but the enclosure must make him rich. South.

To ENCOACH.* v. a. [from coach.] To carry in a coach.

Like Phaëton encoach'd in burnish'd gold.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. I. 3. b.

To ENCOFFIN.* v. a. [from coffin.] To enclose in a coffin.

His body rested here in quietness until the dissolution, when for the gain of the lead in which it was encoffined, it was taken up and thrown into the next water. Weever, Fuller. Mon.

To ENCOMBER.* See TO ENCUMBER.

ENCOMBERMENT.* n. s. [French, encombrement, annoyance; Cotgrave.] Disturbance; molestation.

The best advizement was, of bad, to let her Sleep out her fill, without encomberment.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 38.

ENCOMIAST.† n. s. [encomiaste, old Fr. ἐγκωμιαστής, Gr.] A panegyrist; a proclaimer of praise; a praiser.

The Jesuits are the great encomiasts of the Chinese. Locke
Most of the learned and ingenious men of that age, appear to have courted the favours of this polite and popular encomiast.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 392.

ENCOMIASTICAL.† } adj. [Fr. encomiastique, "extolling to the skies," Cotgrave;
ENCOMIASTICK. } Gr. ἐγκωμιαστικός.] Panegyric; laudatory; containing praise; bestowing praise.

When Sixtus quintus began his encomiastical oration of the Jacobine that killed the French king, &c.

Dean King, Sermon. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 15.

Of his [Golding's] original poetry, I recollect nothing more, than an encomiastick copy of verses prefixed to Barret's Al-vearie published in 1580. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 414.

ENCOMIASTICK.* n. s. Used by Ben Jonson for the panegyrick itself.

Dia. I thank you, Mr. Compass, for your short Encomiastick.

Rui:

It is much in little, sir.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

ENCOMION.* n. s. [Gr. ἐγκώμιον. This was the word in use for praise or panegyrick, before encomium; from which also a verb was formed, viz. to encomionize, to praise. V. Cockeram's Vocabulary.]
Panegyrick.

The people (after the manner of their hyperbolical flattering) applauded him with this blasphemous encomion, That he spake like a god, and not like a man.

Fotherby, Atheom. (1626,) p. 157.

But these puling lovers! I cannot but laugh at them, and their encomions of their mistresses.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657,) ii. 2.

ENCOMIUM. n. s. [ἔγκωμιον.] Panegyrick; praise;
clogy.

How eagerly do some men propagate every little encomium their parasites make of them! Gov. of the Tongue.

A vile encomium doubly ridicules;

There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools. Pope.

To ENCOMPASS. v. a. [from compass.]

1. To enclose; to encircle.

Look how my ring encompasseth thy finger;

Ev'n so thy breast encloseth my poor heart. Shakspeare.

Two strong ligaments encompass the whole head of the femur.

Wiseman, Surgery.

Poetick fields encompass me around,
And still I seem to tread on classic ground. Addison.

2. To shut in; to surround; to environ.

He, having scarce six thousand in his troop,

By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed, and set upon. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. To go round any place; as, Drake encompassed the world.

ENCOMPASSMENT. n. s. [from encompass.] Circumlo-cation; remote tendency of talk.

Finding

By this encompassment and drift of question,
That they do know my son, come you more near. Shakspeare.

ENCORE. adv. [French.] Again; once more. A word used at publick shows when a singer, or fiddler, or buffoon is desired by the audience to do the same thing again.

To the same notes thy sons shall hum or snore,
And all thy yawning daughters cry encore. Pope, Dunciad.

To ENCORE.* v. a. [from the adverb.] To call on the singer or speaker for the repetition of a song or speech.

Dolly, in her master's shop,
Encores them, as she twirls her mop.

Whitehead, Apology for Laureats.

ENCOUNTER. n. s. [encontre, French.]

1. Duel; single fight; conflict.

Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters twist thyself and me. Shakspeare.

Let's leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall something into a slower method. Shakspeare.

Pallas th' encounter seeks; but ere he throws,
To Tuscan Tiber thus address'd his vows:

O sacred stream, direct my flying dart,

And give to pass the proud Halesus' heart. Dryden, Æn.

2. Battle; fight in which enemies rush against each other.

Two black clouds

With heav'n's artillery fraught, come rattling on

Over the Caspian; then stand front to front,

Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow

To join their dark encounter in mid air. Milton, P. L.

3. Eager and warm conversation, either of love or anger.

The peaking cornuto comes to me in the instant of our encounter, after we had spoke the prologue of our comedy.

Shakspeare.

4. Accidental congress; sudden meeting.

Propitious Pallas, to secure her care,

Around him spread a veil of thicken'd air,

To shun th' encounter of the vulgar crowd. Pope, Odyssey.

5. Accosting; transient or unexpected address.

But in what habit will you go along?

—Not like a woman; for I would prevent the loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Three parts of Brutus

Is ours already, and the man entire,

Upon the next encounter, yields him ours. Shakspeare.

6. Casual incident; occasion. This sense is scarcely English.

An equality is not sufficient for the unity of character: 'tis further necessary, that the same spirit appear in all sort of encounters. Pope, View of Epick Poetry.

To ENCOUNTER.† v. a. [Fr. contrer.]

1. To meet face to face; to front.

If I must die,

I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in mine arms. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter
it. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Thou stronger may'st endure the flood of light;

And, while in shades I hear my fainting sight,

Encounter the descending excellence. Dryden.

2. To meet in a hostile manner; to rush against in conflict.

Putting themselves in order of battle, they encountered their enemies. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. To meet with reciprocal kindness.

See, they encounter thee with their hearts thanks;

Both sides are even. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. To attack; to meet in the front.

Our wars

Will turn into a peaceful comick sport,

When ladies crave to be encounter'd with. Shakspeare.

Which way soever we turn, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

5. To oppose; to oppugn.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoicks encountered him. Acts, xvii. 18.

Jurors are not bound to believe two witnesses, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encounter them. Hale.

6. To meet by accident.

I am most fortunate thus to encounter you:

You have ended my business, and I will merrily

Accompany you home. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To ENCOUNTER. v. n.

1. To rush together in a hostile manner; to conflict.

Encounter so,

As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die. Shakspeare.

Five times, Marcius,

Have I fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter

As often as we eat. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. To engage; to fight: it has with before the thing.
Both the wings of his fleet had begun to encounter with the Christians. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

Those who have the most dread of death, must be content to encounter with it, whether they will or no. Wake.

3. To meet face to face.
4. To come together by chance.

ENCOUNTERER. n. s. [from encounter.]

1. Opponent; antagonist; enemy.
The lion will not kick with his feet, but he will strike such a stroke with his tail, that he will break the back of his encounterer with it. Morre against Atheism.

The doctrines of the reformation have kept the field against all encounterers. Atterbury.

2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.

Oh, these encounterers! so glib of tongue,
They give a coaxing welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

To ENCOURAGE. v. a. [encourager, French.]

1. To animate; to incite to any thing.
They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Ps. lxxiv. 5.
2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspire; to embolden.
Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.
I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.
3. To raise confidence; to make confident.
I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCOURAGEMENT. n. s. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.
2. Encrease of confidence.
Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives; nor small Encouragement, Godolphin, wise and just. Philips.
3. Favour; countenance; support.
For when he dies, farewell all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Otway, Orphan.
The reproach of immorality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCOURAGER. † n. s. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

He would have women follow the camp, to be spectators and encouragers of noble actions. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 537.
Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome those arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

ENCOURAGINGLY.  adv.* [from encourage.] In a manner that gives encouragement; in a way that raises confidence.

To ENCRADLE.  v. a.* [from cradle.] To lay in a cradle.

Begin from first, where he encradled was
In simple cratch, wrapt in a wad of hay. Spenser, Hygon of Heav. Love.

To ENCREASE.  v. a.* [old Fr. encresser; yet Dr. Johnson has given all the words of this family with in; although, under the verb increase, he refers to encrease, of which there is no notice in its place. Our old lexicography gives encrease, and the word is now most frequently written with en.]

To augment. See To INCREASE.

ENCRIMSONED.  adj.* [from crimson.] Having a crimson colour.

Grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

ENCRI'SPED.  adj.* [from crisp.] Curling; formed in curls.

Hairs encrisped, yellow as the gold. Skellon, Poems, p. 18.

To ENCROACH. v. a. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, Fr.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser on Ireland.

2. To advance gradually and, by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and afflict;
And every moment rises to the sight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryden.

To ENCROACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees minglith itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Euryome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton, P. I.

Next, fence'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden.

ENCROACH.  n. s.* [from the verb.] Gradual advance; advance by stealth.

I cannot imagine that those hereticks who err fundamentally, and by consequence damnably, took their first rise, and began to set up with a fundamental error; but grew into it by insensible encroachments, and gradual insinuations.

South, Sermon. iv. 370.

ENCROACHER. † n. s. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

An encroacher upon the publick liberty.

Dr. Spenser, Sermon. Camb. 28. June, 1660, p. 18.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
Till Neptune, with one general sweep
Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Richardson, Clarissa.

ENCROACHINGLY.  adv.* [from the part. encroaching.] By way of encroachment. Bailey.

ENCROACHMENT. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.

But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton, P. L.

It is be a man's known principle to depart from his right, if men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. An advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of; this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Suiff.

- To ENCRUST.* v. a. [old Fr. encrouster.] To cover as with a crust. See To INCRUST.

To ENCUMBER.* v. a. [encombrer, French; encombrare, low Latin, from cimbrus, as some suppose, which was formerly used to denote trees cut down, and so laid with their branches as to block up the way. See Du Cange in V. COMBR.] Our word was formerly acomber, whence also tomber, which see; and Spenser wrote encomberment. See also To INCUMBER.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.

We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker.

Encumber'd with his vest, without defence. Dryden.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.

The verbal copier is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.

The god awak'd,

And thrice in vain he shook his wing,
Encumber'd in the silken string. Prior.

3. To load with debts; as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.

ENCUMBRANCE. n. s. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.

Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life. Temple.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Excrescence; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,

The huge encumbrance of horrick woods. Thomson.

3. Burthen upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayliffe.

ENCYCLICAL. adj. [ἐγκυκλικός.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCYCLOPEDE.* n. s. [from encyclopædia; not so old perhaps in our language as that, but full as convenient, and expressive. So cyclopede, which see.] The round of learning.

They are so vigorous for the evidence of sense, that they scarce allow any other, but make the most sublimated knowledge a tumult of phantasms; all thought, local motion; all reason, mechanism; and the whole encyclopæde of arts and sciences but a brisker circulation of the blood!

Mannyngham's Disc. (1681.) p. 54.

ENCYCLOPEDIA.* n. s. [encyclopedic, Fr. Cot-encyclopedy.] grave; Gr. ἐγκυκλοπαίδεια, of ἐν, in, κύκλος, a circle, and παίδεια, instruction, science, of which the root is παῖς, a child.] The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown, Falsg. Err.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopædy. Glasville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopædia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

ENCYCLOPÆDIAN.* adj. [from encyclopædia.] Embracing the whole round of learning.

Let them have that encyclopædian, all the learning in the world, they must keep it to themselves. Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 131.

ENCYCLOPÆDIST.* n. s. [Fr. encyclopediste.] One who assists in compiling books which illustrate the whole round of learning. Both the French and English words are modern.

It became the only resource of the reader, in many cases where explanation was wanted, to have recourse to Chambers's Dictionary, in four large volumes folio; or to the Encyclopædia Britannica, now in eighteen large volumes quarto; or to the still more stupendous performance of the French encyclopedists. Hutton's Mathemat. and Phil. Dict. (1796.) Pref.

ENCYSTED. adj. [ἐκυστός, Gr.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sharp, Surgery.

END.* n. s. [end, Saxon; ende, Su. Goth. andei, M. Goth. from the Icelandick an, defect, according to Srenius.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam. xiv. 27.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.

Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges, xix. 9.

At the end of two months she returned. Judges, xi. 30.

If the world's age and death be argu'd well

By the sun's fall, which now tow'rd earth doth bend,

Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell

So low as woman, should be near her end. Dominie.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen. xlix. 33.

Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome of Epic Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.

Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof. Eccles. vii. 8.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing: as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Psalms xxxvii. 37.

8. The point beyond which no progression can be made.

They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits' end. Psalms cxviii. 27.

9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.

E N D

- My guilt be on my head, and there's an end! Shakespeare.
 10. Death; fate; decease.
 I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.
 The soul receives intelligence,
 By her near genius, of the body's end,
 And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel, Civil Wars.
 'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that has not death in his eye. L'Estrange.
 Remember Milo's end,
 Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.
 My God, my father, and my friend,
 Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.
 Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.
 11. Cessation; period.
 What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world? St. Matthew, xxiv. 3.
 Great houses shall have an end. Amos, iii. 15.
 12. Limit; termination.
 There is none end of the store. Nahum, ii. 9.
 13. Abolition; total loss.
 There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.
 14. Cause of death; destroyer.
 Take heed you dally not before your king,
 Lest he that is the supreme King of kings,
 Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
 Either of you to be the other's end. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.
 O, that a man might know
 The end of this day's business ere it come!
 But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
 The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.
 16. Fragment; broken piece.
 Thus I clothe my naked villainy
 With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy Writ,
 And seem a saint. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 17. Purpose; intention.
 There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republic, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
 I have lov'd!
 What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
 Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.
 Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
 Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.
 Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison, Spect.
 18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.
 Wisdom may have franted one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.
 All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.
 Her only end is never-ending bliss;
 Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
 Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
 And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
 The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Tim. i. 5.
 Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.
 Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.
 Hear, and mark,
 To what end I have brought thee hither!
 Life, with my Indamora, I would choose;
 But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
 For when success a lover's toil attends,
 Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
 The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge.
 19. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end, Dr. Johnson says; of which there can be no doubt,

E N D

- as a friend also has observed with me the form of on end in our elder translation of the Bible.] "Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.
 This stone which I have set up on an end.
Genesis, xxviii. 22. Transl. of 1571.
 20. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, i. e. commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.
 Stay'st thou to vex me here?
 A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame!
Shakespeare, Two Gent. Ver.
 What will that girl do? — Sure no harm at all, sir,
 For she sleeps most an end. Massinger, Very Woman.
 To END.† v. a. [Sax. æmbian.]
 1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
 They have ended all my harvest. Ruth, ii. 21.
 He would in one battle end quarrel with them, either win or lose the empire. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
 That expensive war under which we have so long groan'd, is not yet ended. Smalridge.
 2. To destroy; to put to death.
 The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for instead of thee, king Harry,
 This sword hath ended him. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
 To END.† v. n.
 1. To come to an end; to be finished.
 Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
 And the long labours of your voyage end. Dryden, Æn.
 2. To die. [τελευτάω.] See ENDING.
 3. To terminate; to conclude.
 Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.
 The one seem'd woman to the waist, and fair;
 But ended foul in many a scaly fold. Milton, P. L.
 His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime
 In manhood where youth ended. Milton, P. L.
 4. To cease; to fail.
 His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.
 5. To conclude action or discourse.
 The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
 So charming left his voice. Milton, P. L.
END-ALL.* n. s. [from end and all.] Complete termination.
 That but this blow
 Might be the be-all and the end-all here. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 To ENDAMAGE.† v. a. [Fr. endommager; and so our own word was formerly written: "that he be not endamaged or impeached by his adversaries," Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.] To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
 Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged
 By tortous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right, Spenser, F. Q.
 It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, lest, by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker.
 Where your good word cannot advantage him,
 Your slander never can endamage him. Shakespeare.
 Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
 And lay new platforms to endamage them. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 The trial hath indamag'd thee no way;
 Rather more honour left, and more esteem. Milton, P. R.
 When an erroneous opinion is published, the publick is endamaged, and therefore it becomes punishable by the magistrate. South.
 A great alteration doth seldom any wise endamage or disorder the globe. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

END

ENDA'MAGEABLE.* adj. [from endamage.] Hurtful; capable of doing hurt. Huloet.

ENDA'MAGEMENT.† n. s. [French endommagement.] Damage; loss.

See that Curius have no endamage or hurt. Huloet.
These flags of France that are advanced here,
Have hither march'd to the endamage.

ENDA'MAGING.* n. s. [from endamage.] Injury; damage. Shakspeare, K. John.

That which was the endaming only of their estates.
Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

To ENDA'NGER.† v. a. [from danger.]

1. To put into hazard; to bring into peril.
Whoso removeth stones, shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood, shall be endangered thereby. Eccles. x. 9.
Then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king. Dan. i. 10.

Every one desires his own preservation and happiness, and therefore hath a natural dread of every thing that can destroy his being, or endanger his happiness. Tillotson.

He rais'd the rest,
To force the foes from the Lavinian shore,
And Italy's endanger'd peace restore. Dryden, Æn.

My kingdom claims your birth; my late defence,
Of our endanger'd fleet, may claim your confidence. Dryden.

Volatile salts never exist in an animal body; the heat required to make them volatile, endangers the animal. Arbutnot.
The interest endangered is our title to heaven. Rogers.

2. To incur the danger of; to hazard.
He that turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, endangereth malign ulcers. Bacon.

ENDA'NGERMENT.* n. s. [from endanger.] Hazard; peril.

[He] bade his servant to invent
Which way he enter might without endangerment.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 20.

Wherefore serves our happy redemption, and the liberty we have in Christ, but to deliver us from calamitous yokes, not to be lived under without the endangerment of our souls, and to restore us in some competent measure to a right in every good thing both of this life, and the other? Milton, Tetrachordon.

To ENDE'AR.† v. a. [from dear.]

1. To make dear; to make beloved.
All those instances of charity which usually endear each other, sweetness of conversation, frequent admonition, all significations of love must be expressed towards children. Bp. Taylor.

And in the mixture of all these appears
Variety, which all the rest endears. Denham.

The only thing that can endear religion to your practice, will be to raise your affections above this world. Wake.

2. To make dear; to raise the price of a thing.

Whereas — the excess of new buildings and erections hath daily more and more increased, and is still like to do so;
whereby and by the immoderate confluence of people thither, our said city [of London] and the places adjoining, are and daily will be more and more pestered, all victuals and other provisions endeared, &c.
K. Ja. I.'s Proclam. concern. Buildings, 1618, Rym. Fœd. i. 107.

ENDE'ARMENT.† n. s. [from endear.]

1. The cause of love; means by which any thing is endeared.

No kisses; no endearments. Beaum. and Fl. Wom. pleased.
Her first endearments twining round the soul,
With all the witchcraft of ensnaring love. Thomson, Spring.

2. The state of being endeared; the state of being loved.

Is not the separate property of a thing the great cause of its endearment amongst all mankind? South.

When a man shall have done all that he can to make one his friend, and emptied his purse to create endearment between them, he may, in the end, be forced to write vanity and frustration. South.

END

ENDEA'VOUR.† n. s. [devoir, French; endevoir.
See DEVOIR.] Formerly we had endeavourance, and endeavourment, in use for this word; the former by Bale, the latter by Spenser. Endeavour has been elegantly and justly termed "the child of Hope." Decay of Christian Piety, p. 182. Labour directed to some certain end; effort to obtain or avoid.

My studied purposes went Beyond all man's endeavours. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Heav'n doth divide

The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Here their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I take imitation of an author to be an endeavour of a later poet to write like one who has written before him on the same subject. Dryden.

The bold and sufficient pursue their game with more passion, endeavour, and application, and therefore often succeed.

Temple.
She could not make the least endeavour towards the producing of any thing that hath vital and organical parts. Ray.

Such an assurance as will quicken men's endeavours for the obtaining of a lesser good, ought to animate men more powerfully in the pursuit of that which is infinitely greater. Tillotson.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their constant endeavours after, and steady prosecution of true felicity. Locke.

To ENDEA'VOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To labour to a certain purpose; to work for a certain end. It has commonly after before the thing.

I could wish that more of our country clergy would endeavour after a handsome elocution. Addison, Spect.

Of old, those met rewards who could excel;
And those were prais'd who but endeavour'd well. Pope.

To ENDEA'VOUR. v. a. To attempt; to essay.

To pray'r, repentance, and obedience due,
Though but endeavour'd with sincere intent,
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine ear not shut. Milton, P. L.

ENDEA'VOURER. n. s. [from endeavour.] One who labours to a certain end.

He appears an humble endeavourer, and speaks honestly to no purpose. Rymer, Trag. of the last Age.

ENDE'CAGON. n. s. [ἐνδεκάγων.] A plain figure of eleven sides and angles.

ENDE'MIAL.† adj. [ἐνδημιος, Gr.] Peculiar to a country; used of any disease pro-

ENDE'MICAL. } ceeding from some cause peculiar to the northern climes: Quincy.

We may bring a consumption under the notion of a pandemick, or endemick, or rather a vernacular disease, to England. Harvey on Consumptions.

The place seemed to be healthful; but they speak much of the Colica Austriaca as an endemical and local disease, very hardly yielding unto good medicines.

Brown, Travels, (1685,) p. 156.
Solander, from the frequency of the plants springing up in any region, could gather what endemial diseases the inhabitants were subject to. Ray on the Creation.

An endemial disease is what is common to the people of the country. Arbutnot on Air.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

To ENDE'NIZE. p. a. [from denizen.] To make free;
to enfranchise.

It [the English tongue] hath been beautified and enriched out of other good tongues, by enfranchising and endenizing strange words. Candlen, Rem.

To ENDE'NIZE.* v. a. [from denizen.] To make free;
to naturalize.

It is virtue that gives glory; that will endenizen a man every where. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

END

ENDER.* n. s. [from end. One of our oldest words.]

A finisher.

The maker of faith, and the parfyte endere, Jesu, [the author and finisher of our faith. Present Version.]

Wicliffe, Heb. xii. 2.

ENDING.* n. s. [Sax. enbung.]

1. Conclusion; consequence.

The times also of the Highest have plain beginnings in wonders and powerful works, and endings in effects and signs.

2 Esdr. ix. 6.

2. Termination of life.

Will. If these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it. —

K. Hen. The king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

Yet happy were my death, mine ending blest,

If this I could obtain; that, breast to breast,

Thy bosom might receive my yielded spright.

Fairfax.

3. Cessation of any action.

The fight was deep imprinted in their hearts,

Who saw this bloody fray to ending brought.

Fairfax.

4. End of words as employed for rhymes.

I can find out no rhyme to lady but baby, an innocent rhyme; for scorn, horn, a hard rhyme; for school, fool, a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

To ENDICT. } v. a. [enditer, French; dictum,
To ENDITE. } Latin.]

1. To charge any man by a written accusation before a court of justice: as, he was endited for felony. It is often written indict.

2. To draw up; to compose; to write.

How shall Filbert unto me indite,

When neither I can read nor he can write.

Gay.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules indites,

When to repress, and when indulge our flights!

Pope.

To ENDITE. v. n. To compose.

Your battles they hereafter shall indite,

And draw the image of our Mars in fight.

Waller.

ENDICTMENT. } n. s. [from endite.] A bill or de-

ENDITEMENT. } claration made in form of law, for the benefit of the commonwealth; or an accusation for some offence exhibited unto jurors, and by their verdict found to be true, before an officer can have power to punish the same offence. Cowell.

'Tis necessary that the species of the crime be described in the libel or articles, which our English lawyers call an indictment or information.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

We never drew any indictment at all against them, but think commendably even of them. Hooker.

The hand-writing against him may be cancelled in the court of heaven, and yet the indictment run on in the court of conscience. South.

Attend the court, and thou shalt briefly find

In that one place the manners of mankind;

Hear the endictments, then return again,

Call thyself wretch, and, if thou dar'st, complain.

Dryden.

ENDITER.* n. s. [from endite. One of our oldest words.]

1. An accuser.

Hulot.

2. A composer; a writer; an author.

Enditours of the old cronike.

Gower, Conf. Amant.

Himself will be acknowledged, by all that read him, the basest and hungriest enditer, that could take the boldness to look abroad. Milton, Colasterion.

ENDIVE. n. s. [endive, French; intyhum, Latin.] A plant.

Endive, or succory, is of several sorts; as the white, the green, and the curled. Mortimer, Husb.

ENDLESS.* adj. [Sax. endelear.]

1. Having no end; being without conclusion or termination.

END

Nothing was more endless than the common method of comparing eminent writers by an opposition of particular passages in them. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

2. Infinite in longitudinal extent.

As it is pleasant to the eye to have an endless prospect, so it is some pleasure to a finite understanding to view unlimited excellencies. Tillotson.

3. Infinite in duration; perpetual.

None of the heathens, how curious soever in searching out all kinds of outward ceremonies, could ever once endeavour to resemble herein the church's care for the endless good of her children. Hooker.

But after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest, and endless bliss.

Spenser.

All our glory extinct, and happy state,

Here swallow'd up in endless misery.

Milton, P. L.

4. Incessant; continual.

All the priests and friars in my realm,

Shall in procession sing her endless praise.

Shakespeare.

This worthy Roman

Was such another piece of endless honour,

Such a brave soul dwelt in him.

Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,

And soft Belinda's blush for ever glow.

Pope.

ENDLESSLY.* adv. [Sax. endelearlice.]

1. Incessantly; perpetually.

Though God's promise has made a sure entail of grace to all those who humbly seek, yet it no where engages that it shall importunately and endlessly renew its assaults on those who have often repulsed it. Decay of Piety.

2. Without termination of length.

ENDLESSNESS.* n. s. [Sax. endelearnyffe.]

1. Extension without limit.

It is to be feared — that the endlessness and ill fruits of these contentions — tend mainly to the encrease of atheism.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. Perpetuity; endless duration.

3. The quality of being round without an end.

The Tropick circles have,

Yea, and those small ones, which the poles engrave,

All the same roundness, evenness, and all

The endlessness of the Equinoctial. Donne, Poems, p. 248.

ENDLONG.* adv. [Sax. anblang, onlong; Su. Goth. acundalongs.]

1. Length-ways.

The dore was all of adamant eterne,

Yelencched overthwart and endelong

With iron tough.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

[He] gave him then a shielde of silver white,

A crosse endlong and overthwart full perfect.

Hardyng's Chronicle.

[He] takes in hond

To seeke her endlong both by sea and lond.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 19.

2. In a strait line.

Then spurring at full speed, ran endlong on,

Where Theseus sat on his imperial throne.

Dryden.

ENDMOST.* adj. [Sax. enbemeant.] Remotest; furthest; at the farther end. Dict.

To ENDOCTRINE. v. a. [old French, endoctriner, from the Lat. doctrina.] To instruct; to teach.

Ptolomeus Philadelphus was endoctrined, in the science of good letters, by Strabo. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. (1633), p. 2.

To ENDORSE. v. a. [endorsser, old Fr. Roquef. endosser, modern; from dorsum, Lat.]

1. To register on the back of a writing; to super-scribe.

A French gentleman speaking with an English of the law salique, the English said that was meant of the women themselves, not of males claiming by women. The French gentleman said, Where do you find that gloss? The English answered, Look on the backside of the record of the law salique, and there you shall find it endorsed. Bacon, Apophthegms.

END

Upon credential letters was endorsed this superscription, To the king who hath the sun for his helmet. Howell.
All the letters I can find of yours I have fastened in a folio cover, and the rest in bundles endorsed. Swift to Pope.

2. To write on the back of a bill of exchange. See the second sense of ENDORSEMENT.

Kelly is particularly directed to indorse the bill.

Report of Comm. of H. of Commons on C. Layer, Esq. 1722, p. 63.

3. To cover on the back. This is not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Milton. But Milton had good authority for his usage of it. And the old language of romance used endoss for putting on the back; as, "they endossed on their armours." Knight of the Sea, p. 145.

Nay, so your seat his beauties did endorse,
As I began to wish myself a horse. B. Jonson, Underwoods.
Chariots, or elephants endorse'd with towers
Of archers. Milton, P. R.

ENDORSEMENT. * n. s. [from endorse.]

1. Superscription; writing on the back.

As this collection will grow daily, I have digested it into several bundles, and made proper endorsements on each particular letter. Taiter, No. 164.

2. In commerce, the name of the proprietor or endorser of a bill of exchange. Chambers.

His endorsement on a foreign bill (which is not usually made payable to the bearer) would not have entitled him to have received the money, nor have been a sufficient discharge, except the bill had been made payable to him.

Report of Comm. H. of Comm. on Layer, 1722, p. 63.

3. Ratification.

The endorsement of supreme delight,
Writ by a friend, and with his blood. Herbert.

ENDORSER. * n. s. The proprietor of a bill of exchange, who transferring it to some other, or rendering it payable to the order of some other, or making it serve as an acquittance or receipt, writes his name on the back of it. See the second sense of ENDORSEMENT.

To ENDOSSE. * v. a. [French, endosser.] To engrave; to carve.

He gave me arms in field to fight,
Gave me a shield, in which he did endoss
His dear Redeemer's badge upon the boss.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 53.

Her name in every tree I will endoss. Spenser, Colin Clout.

To ENDOW. v. a. [indoture, Latin; endouainer, French.]

1. To enrich with a portion.

He shall surely endow her to be his wife. Exodus, xxii. 16.

2. To supply with any external goods.

An alms-house I intend to endow very handsomely for a dozen superannuated husbandmen. Addison, Spect.

3. To enrich with any excellence.

I at first with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness
And immortality; that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe.

Milton, P. I.

Among those who are the most richly endowed by nature, and accomplished by their own industry, how few are there whose virtues are not obscured?

Addison.

God did never command us to believe, nor his ministers to preach any doctrine contrary to the reason he hath pleased to endow us with. Swift.

4. To be the fortune of any one.

I do not think

So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

ENDOWER. * n. s. [from endow.] One who enriches with a portion. Fr. dotatur. Sherwood.

END

ENDOWMENT. n. s. [from endow.]

1. Wealth bestowed to any person or use.

2. The bestowing or assuring a dower; the setting forth or severing a sufficient portion for a vicar toward his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. Compt.

3. Appropriation of revenue.

A chapel will I build, with large endowment. Dryden.

4. Gifts of nature. In this sense it is commonly plural.

By a desire of fame, great endowments are not suffered to lie idle and useless to the publick. Addison.

If providence shews itself even in the blemishes of these creatures, how much more does it discover itself in their several endowments, according to the condition in which they are posted? Addison.

To ENDUE. * v. a. [induo, Lat.]

1. To supply with mental excellencies; to invest with intellectual powers.

Endue them with thy holy Spirit. Common Prayer.

Wisdom was Adam's instructor in Paradise: wisdom endued the fathers, who lived before the law, with the knowledge of holy things. Hooker.

These banish'd men that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities.

Shakespeare.

With what ease,
Endued with royal virtues as thou art,
Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne.

Milton, P. R.

Whatsoever other knowledge a man may be endued withal, he is but an ignorant person who doth not know God, the author of his being. Tillotson.

Every Christian is endued with a power, whereby he is enabled to resist and conquer temptations. Tillotson.

2. In the following passage of Genesis it seems incorrectly printed for endow, Dr. Johnson says. But endue was formerly used in the sense also of investing with other powers and advantages than those of the mind; though Dr. Johnson gives the definition only as it applies to mental excellencies. Not such was the opinion of Barret, who, in his dictionary of 1580, renders indued by præditus, applying it to the ornaments of honour and fortune as well as of wit and virtue. In short, endue is to clothe, to invest as with clothes. And Spenser uses it, with the very phrase in question, "to endue with a dowry." Nor is the pretended misprint to be found only in our present Version of the Bible. It is endued in other Versions long before it. In Bishop Wilson's Bible, published in 1785, the word, however, is changed into endowed. The editors of the Bible, which the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge has lately caused to be published with a selection of annotations by those accomplished scholars, have neither regarded the word as incorrect, nor unwarrantably dismissed it from the text.

Returne from whence ye came, and rest a while,
Till morrow next, that I the Elfë subdew,
And with Sansfoy's dead dowry you endew.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 51.

Like a faerie knight himself he drest,
For every shape on him he could endew.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 40.

Thou losel base,
Thou hast with borrowed plumes thyself endewed.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 20.

Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry.

Gen. xix. 20.

To ENDRU'DGE. * v. a. [from drudge.] To make a slave or drudge of.

A slave's slave goes in rank with a beast : such is every one that endrudgeth himself to any known sin.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 29.

ENDURABLE. * adj. [old Fr. endurable.] Tolerable ; sufferable.

Cotgrave.

ENDURANCE. n. s. [from endure.]

1. Continuance ; lastingness.

Some of them are of very great antiquity and continuance, others more late and of less endurance. Spenser on Ireland.

2. Patience ; sufferance.

Great things of small

One can create ; and in what place soc'ers
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance.

Milton, P. L.

Their fortitude was most admirable in their patience and endurance of all evils, of pain, and of death. Temple.

3. State of suffering.

I would fain know whether that man takes a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these higher troubles, to secure himself from a condition infinitely more miserable ? South.

4. Delay ; procrastination. Obsolete.

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers, and have heard you,
Without endurance further. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To ENDURE. † v. a. [endurer, French ; durare ; Latin. Our word had formerly the sense of the Latin induro, to harden, to make hard ; which Wicliffe adopted, and Spenser once has used, F. Q. iv. viii. 27. The old French language has endurir in the same meaning.]

1. To bear ; to sustain ; to support unbroken.

The hardness of bodies is caused chiefly by the jeuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts, which make them not only hard, but fragile, and less enduring of pressure. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. To bear with patience.

So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure ; without him, live no life. Milton, P. L.
The gout haunts usually the easy and the rich, the nice and the lazy, who grow to endure much, because they can endure little. Temple.

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Taking into the city all such things as they thought needful for the enduring of the siege, they destroyed all the rest. Knolles, Hist.

3. To undergo ; to sustain.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. To continue in. Not used. •

The dear endureth the womb but eight months, and is complete at six years. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ENDURE. v. n.

1. To last ; to remain ; to continue.

Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life. St. John, vi. 27.

Doth the crown endure to every generation.

Proverbs, xxvii. 24.

By being able to repeat measures of time, or ideas of stated length of duration in our minds, we can imagine duration, where nothing does really endure or exist. Locke.

A charm, that shall to age endure,
The mind benevolent and pure. Anon.

2. To brook ; to bear ; to admit.

For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people ? Or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred ? Ezra, viii. 6.

Our great English lords could not endure that any kings should reign in Ireland but themselves ; nay, they could hardly endure that the crown of England should have any power over them. Davies on Ireland.

ENDURER. † n. s. [from endure.]

1. One that can bear or endure ; sustainer ; sufferer.

They are very valiant and hardy ; for the most part great endurers of cold, labour, hunger, and all hardness.

Spenser on Ireland.

I'll fit you with my scholars, new practitioners,

Endurers of the time. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

2. Continuer ; laster.

ENDWISE. adv. [end and wise.] Directly ; uprightly ; on end.

A rude and unpolished America, peopled with slothful and naked Indians, living in pitiful huts and cabbins, made of poles set endwise. Ray on the Creation.

To ENECATE. v. a. [eneco, Lat.] To kill ; to destroy.

Some plagues partake of such a pernicious degree of malignity, that, in the manner of a most presentaneous poison, they enecate in two or three hours, suddenly corrupting or extinguishing the vital spirits. Harvey on the Plague.

ENEMY. † n. s. [ennemi, French ; inimicus, Latin.]

1. A publick foe.

All the statutes speak of English rebels and Irish enemies, as if the Irish had never been in condition of subjects, but always out of the protection of the law. Davies on Ireland.
The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men for the next Summer. Addison on the War.

2. A private opponent ; an antagonist.

I say unto you, love your enemies. St. Matt. v. 44.

3. Any one who regards another with malevolence ; not a friend.

Kent, in disguise,

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service,
Improper for a slave. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. One that dislikes.

He that designedly uses ambiguities, ought to be looked on as an enemy to truth and knowledge. Locke.

Bold is the critick, who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love ;
And bolder he who dares aver,
That they were enemies to war.

Prior.

5. In theology, the fiend, the devil. Dr. Johnson merely notices the word in the Book of Common Prayer. It is an old expression for the great foe to man, founded, most probably, on the passage in St. Luke, x. 19. " Over all the power of the enemy ; " — "vim inimici, id est, diaboli." Poli Synopsis Crit. in locum. The French long since adopted the same meaning : "Nos anciens auteurs employoient ce mot [enemi ou ennemi] pour designer le diable." Roquefort in V. ANEMI. See also Donce's Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 100.

Defend us from the danger of the enemy. Common Prayer.
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

ENERGETICAL. * adj. [Gr. ενεργητικός.]

Cockeram.

1. Forcible ; strong.

2. Operative ; active.

The presence of this Holy Spirit — by energetical communion induceth a nature, and condition, apt to quicken and assure devotion. Gregory, Notes on Pass. in Script. p. 141.

That energetical powerful instrument, the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, even to every Jew, nay, and Heathen. Hammond, Works, iv. 563.

ENERGETICALLY. * adv. [from energetical.] In an operative manner.

Against and above which [the Church of Christ] the cardinals of Rome do most energetically oppose and advance themselves. Potter on the Number 666, (1647.) p. 140.

E N E

ENERGETICK. adj. [ἐνεργητικόν.]

1. Forcible; active; vigorous; powerful in effect; efficacious.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetick as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetick. Grew.

ENERGICK.* adj. [from energy. Fr. energique. Both our own, and the French word, modern.] Powerful in effect.

O Musick, sphere-descended maid!—

Arise, as in that elder time,

Warm, energick, chaste, sublime! Collins, Ode on the Passions.

To ENERGIZE.* v. a. [from energy.] To give energy; to excite action.

As all energies are attributes, they have reference of course to certain energizing substances. Harris, Hermes, i. 9.

It is less the purpose of our present meeting to feast the ravished ear with the enchanting sounds of harmony, (which afford indeed the purest of the pleasures of the senses,) than to taste those nobler exercises of energizing love, of which flesh and blood, the animal part of us, can no more partake than it can inherit heaven.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon, Sons of the Clergy, 1786.

ENERGIZER.* n. s. [from energize.] That which occasions or causes.

Every energy is necessarily situate between two substantives; an energizer which is active, and a subject which is passive.

Harris, Hermes, i. 9.

ENERGY.† n. s. [ἐνέργεια, Gr.] I have not been able to trace our word to any author before Bacon. Sidney, in his Defence of Poesy, written soon after 1580, shews that it was not then in use; for he there introduces, in its stead, "energia, as the Greeks call it." Henry More, in his Interpretation General at the end of his Song of the Soul in 1647, calls "energy a peculiar Platonical term."

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrors, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies. Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heav'nly fire

The God of nature did his soul inspire

Or earth, but new divided from the sky,

And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy. Dryden.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy. Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession. Smalridge.

What but God!

Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,

And unremitting energy, pervades,

Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtlest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy. Ray on the Creation.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds? Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authors, see

The comprehensive English energy? Roscommon.

Swift and ready, and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers. Holder.

E N F

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound. Swift.

To ENERVATE. v. a. [enervare, Lat.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces. Bacon.

Footmen exercise themselves, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots. Arbutnot and Pope.

ENERVATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Weakened; deprived of force.

On each enervate string they taught the note

To pant, or tremble, through an eunuch's throat. Pope.

Away, enervate bards, away,

Who spin the courtly, silken lay!

Dr. Warton, Ode on West's Pindar.

ENERVATION.† n. s. [enervation, Fr.]

1. The act of weakening; emasculation.

2. The state of being weakened; effeminacy.

This colour of meliority and preheminnence is a sign of enervation and weakness.

Bacon, Ess. Table of Colours of Good and Evil.

To ENERVATE.† v. a. [enervare, old Fr. enervo, Lat.]

To weaken; to break the force of; to crush.

We shall be able to solve and enerve their force. Digby.

Such object hath the pow'r to soft'n and tame

Severest temper, smooth the rugged'st brow,

Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve. Milton, P. R.

To ENFAMISH. v. a. [from famish.] To starve; to famish; to kill with hunger. Dict.

To ENFEBLE. v. a. [from feeble.] To weaken; to enervate; to deprive of strength.

I've belied a lady,

The princess of this country; and the air on't

Revengeingly enfeebles me. Shakespeare, Cymb.

My people are with sickness much enfeebled. Shakespeare.

Much hath hell debas'd, and pain

Enfeeb'd me, to what I was in heaven! Milton, P. L.

Some employ their time in affairs below the dignity of their persons; and being called by God, or the republick, to bear great burdens, do enfeebled their understandings by sordid and brutish business. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mold,

Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,

And sunk me even below my own weak sex. Addison, Cato.

ENFE'LORED.* adj. [Fr. enferlounir, to become fierce, to grow cruel; Cotgrave.] Full of fierceness; inclined to cruelty.

With that, like one enferloun'd or distraught,

She forth did roam whither her rage her bore,

With frantick passion and with furious fraught. Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 48.

To ENFE'OFF.† v. a. [feoffamentum, low Lat.]

1. To invest with any dignities or possessions. A law term.

If the eldest son enfeoff the second, reserving homage, and that homage paid, and then the second son dies without issue, it will descend to the eldest as heir, and the seignory is extinct. Hale, Com. Law of England.

2. To give up entirely; to surrender.

[He] grew a companion to the common streets,

Enfeoff'd himself to popularity. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

ENFE'OFFMENT. n. s. [from enfeoff.]

1. The act of enfeoffing.

2. The instrument or deed by which one is invested with possessions.

To ENFE'TTER. v. a. [from fetter.] To bind in fetters; to enchain. Not in use.

His soul is so enfetter'd to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list. Shakspeare.

To ENFE'VER.* v. a. [Fr. enfesorer, "to drive into a fever;" Cotgrave.] To produce fever. Modern in our language.

In vain the purer stream
Courts him, as gently the green bank it laves,
To blend the enfesering draught with its pellucid waves.
Seward's Sonnets.

To ENFIE'RCE.* v. a. [Fr. enfesir.] To make fierce.

Abashed now, not fighting so;
But, more enfesied through his curish play,
Him sternly grypt. Spenser, F. Q. ii. iv. 8.

ENFILADE.† n. s. [Fr.] A strait passage; any thing through which a right line may be drawn.

The trees have swelled out beyond the line traced for them, and destroyed the enslade, by advancing into the walks, or retiring from them. Swinnburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 38.

To ENFILADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce in a right line.

The avenues, being cut through the wood in right lines, were ensladed by the Spanish cannon.
Expedition to Carthage.

To ENFI'RE.† v. a. [from fire.] To fire; to set on fire; to kindle.

So hard those heavenly beauties he ensir'd
As things divine, least passions do impress.
Spenser, Hymn on Love.

As for his holy sisters at Bruxelis, the touch of whom hath so much ensired his ghostly zeal, I intended no quarrel to them in particular.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 63.

To ENFO'LD.* See To INFOLD.

To ENFORCE. v. a. [enforcir, Fr.]

1. To give strength to; to strengthen; to invigorate.

2. To make or gain by force.

The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed sight,
Did fall to ground. Spenser, F. Q.
Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers Enforce their charity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To put in act by violence.

Skir away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

4. To instigate; to provoke; to urge on; to animate.

Fear gave her wings, and age enforced my flight
Through woods and plains. Spenser, F. Q.
If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakspeare.

5. To urge with energy.

All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court. Clarendon.

To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.

6. To compel; to constrain.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shakspeare.
A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antians
Was ne'er distributed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To ENFO'RCE.† v. n.

1. To attempt by force.

He also ensorsid [in the present version, hath gone about] to defoule the temple. Wicliffe, Acts, xxiv. 6.

2. To prove; to evince; to shew beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hooker.

ENFO'RCE. n. s. [from force.] Power; strength. Not used.

He now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. Milton, S. A.

ENFO'RCEABLE.* adj. [from enforce.] Having power to compel or constrain.

ENFO'RCEBLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou did'st put this sow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou
Do'st it enforcedly: thou'dst courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakspeare, Timon.

ENFO'RCEMENT. n. s. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakspeare.
He that contendeth against these enforcements, may easily master or resist them. Raleigh, Hist.

2. Sanction; that which gives force to a law.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.

3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

4. Pressing exigence.

More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

ENFO'RCE.† n. s. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

Pardon me, sir, I'll be no love enforcer;
I use no power of mine unto those ends.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid of the Mill.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond, Fundamentals.

To ENFO'RM.* v. a. [old Fr. enformer.] To fashion; to direct.

He knew the diverse went of mortal ways,
And in the minds of men had great insight;
Which with sage counsel, when they went astray,
He could enforme, and them reduce aright.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 3.

ENFO'ULDRED.† adj. [from fouldroyer, Fr.] Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what outrage and what cries,
With foul enfoldred smoke and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Spenser, F. Q.

To ENFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some parts of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies on Ireland.

Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Baron, Fiasco.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shakspeare.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us. Watts.

ENFRANCHISEMENT.† n. s. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burgh of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowel.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement. Shakspeare, Rich. II.
To make me captive, where enfranchisement
Cannot be gotten. Brodne, Brit. Past. i. 1.

That false enfranchisement with ease is found:
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden, Persius.

ENFRANCHISER.* n. s. [from enfranchise.] One who gives freedom. Sherwood.

To ENFRO'WARD.* v. a. [from forward.] To make perverse or ungovernable. An old and very useful word, but hitherto unnoticed.

The multitude of crooked and side respects, which are the only clouds that eclipse the truth from shining more lightly on the face of the world, and the only pricks which so enfroward men's affections as not to consider and follow what were for the best, do cause that this chief unity findeth small acceptance. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

ENFRO'ZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser, Hymn on Love.

To ENGAGE.† v. a. [engager, French.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

2. To impawn; to stake; [perhaps from the German wagen, to hazard.]

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion: some lust or interest engageth them against it. Tillotson.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engag'd ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we listed not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconsumptible lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby on Bodies.

5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.

Good-nature engages every body to him. Addison.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To every duty he could minds engage,
Provoked their courage, and command their rage. Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage. Dryden, Æn.

So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;
So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.

We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expence to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement. Atterbury.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.

For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryden.

10. To encounter; to fight.

Our little fleet was now engag'd. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.
The army was engaged before the cannon was turned, or the ground made choice of upon which they were to fight. Clarendon, Hist. Reb. B. ix.

The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage. Pope.

To ENGAGE.† v. n.

1. To conflict; to fight.

Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.

2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.

'Tis not indeed my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden, Persius.

ENGAGEDLY.* adv. [from the part. engaged.] In a way bespeaking attachment to a party.

Far better it were for publick good, there were more (deserving the name of Johannes de Indagine) progressive pioneers in the mines of knowledge, than controverters of what is found: it would lessen the number of conciliatours; which cannot themselves now write, but as engagedly biased to one side or other. Whillock, Mann. of the English, p. 233.

ENGAGEMENT.† n. s. [from engage; engagement, French.]

1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.

2. Obligation by contract.

We have, in expence, exceeded our engagements. Atterbury.

3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.

This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the press to examine. Suiff.

4. Employment of the attention.

Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession. Rogers.

5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical, Dr. Johnson says, citing the examples from Dryden and Philips; and certainly very common, it may be added, being the usual phrase for a sea-fight, whether particular or general, between single ships or squadrons.

Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.

He [the French admiral] tacked, and would not venture an engagement. Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times.

Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Philips.

6. Obligation; motive.

ENG

This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity.

Hammond, Fundamentals.

7. In the history of this country, the obligation imposed by Oliver Cromwell, after he was declared protector; which required every member of parliament to engage himself to be true and faithful to him and the commonwealth, and not to consent to any alteration of the government then settled.

ENG'GER.* n. s. [from engage.] One who signs a particular engagement. See the seventh sense of ENGAGEMENT.

We may safely give leave to the covenanters, the engager, and the rest of a schismatical people, to pretend as high as they can, whilst we are sure we are as much as they can pretend to.

Ellis, Sermon. 29. May, 1661, p. 39.

ENG'GINGLY.* adv. [from the part. engaging.] In a winning or obliging manner.

To ENG'OL.* v. a. [Old French, enjailier, "mettre en géole, emprisonner." Lacombe, Suppl. Rendre, by Cotgrave, to encage as well as to engaol. See also To CAJOLE.] To imprison; to confine.

Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

To ENG'LLANT.* v. a. [from gallant.] To make a gallant of.

If you could but endear yourself to her affection, you were eternally engallanted.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To ENG'RBOL.* v. a. [from garboil.] To disorder; to disturb.

It is strange, that for wishing, advising, and in his own particular using and ensuing that moderation, thereby not to engarboil the church, and disturb the course of piety, he should so, by you and your's, be blamed, accused, and traduced for a Papist and an Armenian; calumniated almost in every ordinary, by your means, for a dangerous driver at popery and sedition.

Mpungatu, App. to Cæs. p. 80.

To ENG'RLAND.* v. a. [Fr. enguirlander, "to crown with a garland." Cotgrave.] To encircle with a garland.

Let us rather plant more laurels for to engarland the poets' heads.

Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

To ENG'RRISON.* v. a. [from garrison.] To protect by a garrison.

Those strangers were no otherwise engaged, than as they that would hold fair correspondence with the citizens where they were engarrisoned.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Neptune with a guard doth engarrison her strongly. Hovell.

Every man has corrupt, sinful habits that have overspread, and, as it were, engarrisoned themselves in the most inward parts of his soul.

South, Sermon. vii. 51.

ENG'STRIMUTH.* n. s. [old Fr. engastrimythe, from the Gr. iv, in, γαστήρ, the belly, and μῦθος, speech. In Cockeram's old vocabulary, our word is written engastromich, (probably an error of the press,) "one who seems to speak in his belly." A ventriloquist. See VENTRILQUIST.

To ENG'NDER.* v. a. [engendrer, French.]

1. To beget between different sexes.

This bastard love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness.

Sidney.

2. To produce; to form.

Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engender'st the black and adder blue. Shakespeare, Timon.

Again, if souls do other souls beget,
Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour?

Davies.

3. To excite; to cause; to produce.

ENG

Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies.

Shakespeare.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends.

Vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief.

Prior.

To ENG'NDER.* v. n. To be caused; to be produced.

Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there.

Dryden.

ENG'NDERER.* n. s. [Fr. engendreur, "an engenderer, a begetter, breeder, &c." Cotgrave.] One who begets.

The engenderers and ingendered.

Davies, Wil's Pilgrim. sign. O. i.

To ENG'LD.* v. a. [from gild.] To brighten; to illuminate.

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery o's and eyes of light.

Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

ENGINE.* n. s. [engin, French; ingegno, inganno, Italian; engano, Spanish; ingenium, Lat.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.

In all engines it must be considered, what weight every beam is to carry.

Adams.

2. A military machine.

This is our engine, towers that overthrows;

Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes.

Fairfax.

3. An instrument of torture; the rack.

O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!

Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature

From the fix'd place.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Their souls shot through with adders, torn on engines.

Beaumont and Fl. Night-Walker.

4. Any instrument.

The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed.

Raleigh, Essays.

He takes the scissors, and extends

The little engine on his fingers ends.

Pope.

5. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;

And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.

Dryden.

6. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect.

Usually in an ill sense.

Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth.

Duppa, Rules for Devotion.

Nor did he 'scape

By all his engines, but was headlong sent

With his industrious crew to build in hell.

Milton, P. L.

7. An agent for another. In contempt.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear

His fortunes up into the state they were.

Daniel.

ENGINE'ER.* n. s. [old Fr. enginier, "an engineer;"]

Cotgrave; so our word was formerly written, by others also, as well as engineer. So Sherwood; so, in Parthenia Sacra published in 1633, p. 70. he [the bee] is a great engineer in that mould, working his subtle mincs fill he be all in a sweat. But the word, thus anglicised, has not obtained.]

1. One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.

For 'tis the sport to have the engineer

Hoist with his own petard.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Him thus enrag'd,
Deserving from afar, some engineer,
Dextrous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd
By one nice shot to terminate the war.

An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice.

Philips.

Addison.

Bullockar.

2. A maker of engines.

ENGINEERY.† n. s. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.

They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, engineery, or navigation.

Approaching, gross and huge, in hollow cube
Training his devilish engineery.

Milton, P. I.

3. Any device, or contrivance.

The fraudulent engineery of Rome.

Shenstone, Economy.

To ENGI'RD.† v. a. part. engirt. [from gird. Dr. Johnson has hastily placed, as an example of this word, the verb engirt from Shakspeare's King Henry the Sixth; of which verb, however, he takes no other notice, though it is certainly not uncommon. He made a similar mistake in begirt. See To BEGIRT.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.

Let cruel Discord bear thee company,
Engirt with snakes.

Gascoigne, Jocasta, (1577.)

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent?

Shakspeare.

To ENGI'RT.* v. a. To encircle; to surround; to engird.

That gold must round engirt these brows of mine.

Shakspeare, I. Hen. VI. P. II.

A lilly prison'd in a gnol of snow;—
So white a friend engirts so white a foe.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Ad.

He who call'd with thought to birth
Yon tented sky, this laughing earth,
And dress'd with springs and forests tall,
And pour'd the main engirting all.

Collins, Ode on the Poetical Character.

To ENGLA'D.* v. a. [from glad.] To make glad.

The lark upon the somer's day, —
Mounteth on high, with hir melodious lay,
Of the sun shine *engladde*d with the light.

Skelton, Poems, p. 26.

ENGLA'IMED.* adj. [from the Sax. clamian.] Nauseated, according to Coles; but it is rather furred, claminy. Obsolete.

His tongue engleymed, and his nose black.

Lab. Festiv. fol. 16. b.

ENGLAND.* n. s. [Sax. Engla-land, i. e. Anglorum terra, Angles' land.] The southern division of Great Britain.

Egbert [ann. 819.] caused all the south of the Island to be called England, after the Angles, of whom himself came.

Speed, Hist. of Gr. Brit.

Whence this name of England, and consequently of English, should come, is to be considered. — Very apparent it is, that many countries have aptly taken their names from the very nature of their soil, or from the manner of their situation; — and most manifest it is, that in the ancient Teutonic, as well as the modern, either high or low, the word eng signifieth narrow or straight, and sometimes a nook; and if a man at this present should ask any Dutchman in some language, besides his own, that he understandeth, how he would in his own language call a narrow country or region, he would straightways answer and say, Engeland or England. Not unfitly then may old England, [between Ivitaland and Holsatia,] by the little or narrow situation thereof in a very nook of land bordering upon Mare Balticum, have had at the first, in the ancient Teutonic language, that denomination. And not only this old England whereof we speak, but OUR PRESENT COUNTRY OF ENGLAND, also growing to a narrowness or straightness both towards the north and towards the west, doth not disagree from this reason; though perhaps another reason might also move king Egbert to cause it to be called England.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 5.

England hath bred more princes renowned for sanctity than any Christian nation whatsoever. It doth also redound to the eternal honour of England, that our countrymen have twice been schoolmasters to France: first, when they taught the Gauls the discipline of the Druids; and after, when they and the Scottishmen first taught the French the liberal arts, and persuaded Carolus Magnus to found the university of Paris.

Camden, Remains.

ENGLISH.† adj. [Sax. enghr. The old Fr. englesche was in use in 1300. V. Lacombe.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.

Most foreign writers who have given any character of the English nation, whatever vices they ascribe to it, allow in general, that the people are naturally modest.

Addison, Spect. No. 407.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster, or parget; the finer, spoad.

Woodward.

ENGLISH.* n. s.

1. The people of England.

The Angles, Englishmen, or Saxons, by God's wonderful providence, were transplanted hither out of Germany. — They made themselves by conquest absolute lords of all the better soil as far as Orkney; which cannot be doubted of, when their English tongue reacheth so far along the east coast unto the farthest parts of Scotland; and the people thereof are called by the Highlanders, which are the true Scots, by no other name than Saxons, by which they also call us the English.

Camden, Rem.

The world stands in admiration of the capacity and docibleness of the English, that persons of ordinary breeding, extraction, and callings, should become statesmen and soldiers, commanders and counsellors, both in the art of war and mysteries of state.

Howell, Lett. iv. 47.

2. The language of England.

He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

I can speak English, my lord, as well as you.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Chaucer was a great mingler of English with French.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

To ENGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.

The hollow instrument terebra, we may english piercer.

Bacon.

We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

ENGLISHRY.* n. s. The state or privilege of being an Englishman. An old law expression. Cowel. Irishry was thus used for being Irish, in queen Elizabeth's time.

To ENGLU'T. v. a. [engloutir, French.]

1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business.
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me, for my particular grief

Engluts and swallows other sorrows.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Certainly, thou art so near the gull,

Thou needs must be englutted.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants

This right englutted!

Shakspeare, Timon.

2. To fill.

Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spight. Spenser.
3. To glut; to pamper.

Being once englutted with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham, Schoolmaster.
To ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gorc.] To pierce; to prick.
Not used.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Spenser, F. Q.
To ENGO'RGE. † v. a. [old Fr. engonger, from gorge,
a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.
Then fraught with rancour and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all. Spenser, F. Q.
That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey. Spenser, F. Q.
With pleasures cloy'd, engorged with the fill.
Mir. for Mag. p. 425.

To ENGO'RGE. † v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.
Nor was it wonder that he thus did swell,
Who had engorg'd and drunken was with Hell.

Beaumont's Psyche, (1651.) xv. 293.
Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death! Milton, P. L.
To ENGRAFF.* v. a. [from graff. Fr. graffir.]
To fix deeply; to attach. See To INGRAFF.
You have been so much engraffed to Falstaff.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.
ENGRAFFMENT.* n. s. [from engraff.] Root; that which is engrafted.

Thus the relations between men and men are changed, we may be obliged to act against those very instincts, which, from their deep engraffment, have (though improperly) been called the laws of nature. Ellis, Knowl. of Div. Things, p. 425.

ENGRAFTED.* part. adj. Planted; inserted into a body to which it does not belong.

Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. James, i. 21.
All filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness must be first laid aside, that we may be fitted to receive with meekness this en- grafted word; which shews it cannot import any thing, which is by nature always in us. Whitby.

To ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from grele, French, hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.

Æacides then shows
A long lance, and a caldron new, engraill'd with twenty hues.
Chapman's Iliads.

Polwheel beareth a saultier engrailed.
To ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.

Seest how fresh my flowers bene spread,
Dyed in lillie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in dusty grain? Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

To ENGRA'PPLE. v. n. [from grapple.] To close with;
to contend with hold on each other.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRA'SP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now gan Pyrocles wax as wood & he,
And him affronted with impatient night;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spenser.

To ENGRA'VE. † v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass.
engraved or engraven, [engraver. Fr.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.
Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Spenser, F. Q.

O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison, Ossid.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.

Engrave the two stones with the names. Ex. xxviii. 11.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,
Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with the beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhumate; to inter.

The sixth had charge of them now being dead,
In seemly sort their courses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spenser, F. Q.
So both agree their bodies to engrave. Spenser, F. Q.
[They] did end their honest life,
And lye here engraved under the marble stone. Ashmole's Berksh. ii. 348.

ENGRA'VEMENT.* n. s. [from engrave.] The work of an engraver.

We being the offspring of God ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, the engraving of art and man's device. Barrow on the Devalogue.

ENGRA'VE. † n. s. [from engrave, Fr. engraver.]
A cutter in stone or other matter.

All manner of work of the engraver. Exod. xxxv. 35.
Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

ENGRA'VERY.* n. s. [from engraver.] The work of an engraver.

Some handsome engraveries and medals.
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 210.

ENGRA'VING.* n. s. [from engrave.]

1. The work of an engraver; the picture or mark engraved.

With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel. Exod. xxviii. 11.

2. The art of engraving, as a modern invention, either in wood or in copper.

To ENGRIE'VE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex;
to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infix'd in my breast,
Raukled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest. Spenser, F. Q.
Aches, and hurts, and corns, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ENGROSS. v. a. [from grossir, Fr.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wise,
Of that sea's nature did him not advise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agrieze,
That every weighty thing they did upbear. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To encrease in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engrossest all the griefs as thine,
Thou rob'st me of a moiety. Shakspeare.

Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair.

Swift.

5. To purchase any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGROSSER.† n. s. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

Ye engrossers and regraters, ye sellers with false weights and with false measures, — will ye never leave to content yourselves with honest and lawful gain?

Harmer, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1587), p. 176.
Should ye set an oligarchy of twenty engrossers over it, to bring a famine upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measured to us by their bushel?

Milton, Arcopaglica.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGROSSING.* n. s. [from engross.]

1. In commerce, the buying up of any commodity in the gross, or forestalling the market.

2. In law, the copying of any written instrument. See the second sense of ENGROSSMENT.

ENGROSSMENT.† n. s. [from engross.]

1. Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the dying father.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

2. Copy of a written instrument.

Which clause, being approved by all parties, was in the king's presence entered in the bill that his majesty had signed; and, being afterwards added to the engrossment, it was again thus reformed. Ld. Clarendon's Life, ii. 495.

TO ENGUA'RD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

TO ENGULF.* v. a. [Milton and others write this word ingulf. Some have preferred engulf; and it should be so written, being from the French engolfer, "to engulf." Cotgrave.] To cast into a gulf.

They might suffice to make us advised to keep rather the known, and beaten way with safety, than upon every giddy and brainless warrant to engulf ourselves in those passages, wherein so many have perished before us.

Hayward, Answer to Doleman, (1603), ch. 8.

Seeing myself engaged, yea and engulfed in so many anguishes and perplexities. Transl. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 36.

My thoughts shall be Almost engulf'd in an infinity. J. Hall's Poems, (1646), p. 35.

Luxury engulphs the soul in such base pleasures, and makes it like the worst of devils. Hewley's Sermon, (1658), p. 206.

TO ENHA'NCE.† v. a. [hausser, enhausser, Fr.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. This, it may be added, was the primary usage of the word; for Wicliffe and Chaucer so employ it. It is still an heraldick term in this sense.

Both of them high at once their hands enhanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same: its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty. L' Etrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHANCEMENT. n. s. [from enhance.]

1. Encrease; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; encrease of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Gov. of the Tongue.

ENHANCER.* n. s. [from enhance.] One who raises the price of a thing.

In such cases we must be so affected as that we grudge to ourselves our own gain, that we be not in the first file of enhancers. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

TO ENHA'ROUR.* v. a. [from harbour.] To dwell in; to inhabit.

O true delight, enharbousing the breasts
Of those sweet creatures with the plummy crests. W. Browne.

TO ENHA'RDEN.* v. a. [Fr. ehardir, "to hearten, to embolden;" Cotgrave.] To encourage.

France useth — to eharden one with confidence; for the gentry of France have a kind of loose becoming boldness, &c. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. (1642), p. 192.

ENHARMO'NICK.* adj. [from harmony; Fr. enharmónique.] A term applied to the last of the three divisions of musick by the ancients; and applied also to the manner of so disposing the voice in singing, as to render the melody more affecting. Dr. Ash has inconsiderately defined this word inharmonious, which is the very reverse of its meaning.

In passing from one song to another, she [Leonora Baroni] shews sometimes the divisions of the enharmónick and chromatick species with so much air and sweetness, that every hearer is ravished with that delicate and difficult mode of singing. Warton, from M. Maugars, Notes on Milton.

ENIGMA. n. s. [énigma, Lat. énigma.] A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrifice will free the god's command. Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMA'TICAL. adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.

E N J

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broome.

ENIGMA'TICK.* adj. [Fr. enigmatique.] Obscure; ambiguously described.

An enigmatick foe, whose ammunition
Is nothing else but want of all provision.

Beaumont's Psyche, ix. 53.

ENIGMATIST. n. s. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addison, Whig Exam.

To ENIGMATIZE.* v. n. [from enigma.] To deal in enigmas.

To ENJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight

That he'll enjoin me to. Shakspeare, Much ado.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER. n. s. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT. n. s. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ENJOY. v. a. [jouir, enjouir, French.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison, Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, to whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who to enjoy
Plato's Elysium, leap'd into the sea,

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjouir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More against Atheism.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? South.

To ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton, P. L.

ENJOYABLE.* adj. [from enjoy.] Capable of enjoyment; yielding enjoyment.

The evening of our days is generally the calmest and the most enjoyable of them. Pope, Lett.

ENJOYER.* n. s. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession.

It [the beatifical vision] relates to an intrinsic worth, and some proportionateness in the enjoyer.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Res. P. ii. (1654.) p. 31.

They were the greatest enjoyers, and the greatest abusers of mercy that ever lived. South, Sermon. viii. 365.

ENJOYMENT. n. s. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyment. Tillotson.

To ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.

Edmund enkindle all the sparks of nature

To quit this horrid act. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand

Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the throne of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

— That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ENLARD.* v. a. [from lard; old French enlarder, “embrocher,” Roquem.] To grease; to baste.

Both our own and the French word are borrowed from the kitchen. Shakspeare, just before the following passage, speaks of “basting arrogance.”

That were to enlard his fat-already pride. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

To ENLARGE. v. a. [enlargir, French.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandize.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invividious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

To ENLARGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

They appointed the Chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars. Clarendon.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather wish the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh, Essays.

ENLARGEDLY.* adv. [from the part. enlarged.] In an enlarged manner.

Justification is taken two ways in Scripture; "strictè magis, & extensivè;" precisely, for the remission of sins by the only merits and satisfaction of Christ, accepted for us, and imputed to us; and enlargedly, for that act of God, and the necessary and immediate concomitants unto and consequents upon that, the whole and entire state and quality and condition of man regenerate, changed; by which a sinner, guilty of death, is acquitted, cleansed, made just in himself, reconciled unto God, appointed to walk, and beginning to walk, in holiness and newness of life. Moulagu, App. to Cæs. p. 172.

ENLARGEMENT. n. s. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city, with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds' enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us pris'ners to our isle. Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Esther, iv. 14.

3. Magnifying representation.

And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it made enlargements too. Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.

He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLARGER. n. s. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that encreases or dilates any thing.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ENLARGING.* n. s. [from enlarge.] Enlargement; extension.

There was an enlarging and a winding about still upward to the side chambers. Ezek. xli. 7.

To ENLIGHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.

Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
*Enlight*s the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

To ENLIGHTEN.† v. a. [Sax. enlhtan.]

1. To illuminate; to supply with light.

God will enlighten my darkness. Psalms.
As one sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.

2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.

His eyes were enlightened. 1 Sam. xiv. 21.

Love never fails to master what he finds,
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden.

3. To instruct; to furnish with encrease of knowledge.

This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spectator.

'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rogers.

4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.

5. To illuminate with divine knowledge.

Those who were once enlightened. Hebrews, vi. 4.

ENLIGHTENER.† n. s. [from enlighten.]

1. Illuminator; one that gives light.

O, sent from heaven,
Enlightener of my darkness! gracious things
Thou hast revealed. Milton, P. L.

The two great lights, or luminaries, enlighteners, as the word signifies, are the sun, which enlightens us by day; and the moon, which enlightens us by night. Patrick on Genesis.

It represented the sun the great enlightener of the universe. A. Smith, Hist. Astron. § 4.

2. Instructor.

Is it possible to suppose them [the Apostles] to be deserted by this enlightener, when they sat down to the other part of work; to frame a rule for the lasting service of the church?

Warburton, Disc. concern. the Holy Spirit.

To ENLINK. v. a. [from link.] To chain to; to connect.

Enlink to waste and desolation. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To ENLIST.* v. a. [from list.] To enrol or register.

This word is modern. Dr. Johnson takes no notice of it, but has twice used it in his definitions of list. See To LIST.

To ENLIVE.* v. a. [from life, live.] To animate; to make alive.

This dissolved body shall be raised out of the dust, and enlived with this very soul wherewith it is now animated. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 30.

Prince of the orchard, fair as dawning morn,
Fenc'd with the law, and ripe as soon as horn
That apple grew; which this soul did enlive,
Till the then climbing serpent, that now creeps
For that offence for which all mankind weeps,
Took it. Donne, Poems, p. 296.

See, see! the darts by which we burn'd
Are bright Loysa's pencils turn'd:
With which she now enliveth more
Beauties than they destroy'd before. Lovelace, Luc. p. 19.

To ENLIVEN.† v. a. [from life, live.] Our elder word, we see, was enlive; which hitherto has passed unnoticed.]

1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.

There warm'd alike by Sol's enlivening power,
The weed, aspiring, emulates the flower. Shenstone.

2. To make vigorous or active.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light;
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.
In a glass-house, the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLIVENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs. Dryden.

ENN

ENLIVENING.* n. s. [from enliven.] That which makes cheerful.

The good man is full of joyful enlivenings.

Fellham, Res. i. 84.

To ENLUMINE. v. a. [enluminer, Fr.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not now in use.

For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire.

Spenser.

To ENMABLE. v. a. [from marble.] To turn to marble; to harden. Obsolete.

Thou do'st enmarble the proud heart of her,
Whose loves before their life they do prefer.

Spenser.

To ENMESH. v. a. [from mesh.] To net; to entangle; to intrap.

So will I turn her virtue into pitch;
And out of her own goodness make the net,
That shall enmesh them all.

Shakspeare, Othello.

To ENMEW.† See To EMMEW.

ENMITY.† n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity, Dr. Johnson says. The fact is, that our word was formerly written enimite, or enemite, as in Barret's Alveary, 1589; and in Sherwood's old dictionary, where it is translated the Fr. inimitié, and in the more ancient French it was enemistié; Lat. inimicitia.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.

Their being forged to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books.

Locke.

2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
In bitterest enmity.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her seed:
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel.

Milton, P. I.

How far these controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine.

Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?

Jam. iv. 4.

You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it.

Wake, Prepar. for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all rofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air.

Shakspeare.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more.

Atterbury.

To ENMOVE.† See To EMMOVE.

ENNEAGON. n. s. [ennea and gonia.] A figure of nine angles.

ENNEATICAL. adj. [ennea.] Enneatical days, are every ninth day of a sickness; and enneatical years, every ninth year of one's life.

To ENNEW.* v. a. [from new.] To make new.

Our natural tongue is rude,
And hard to be ennew'd
With polish'd termes.

Skeilton, Poems, p. 236.

To ENNOBLE. v. a. [ennobler, Fr.]

1. To raise from commonalty to nobility.

ENO

Many fair promotions
Are given daily to ennoble those,
That scarce some two days since were worth a noble.

Shakspeare.

2. To dignify; to aggrandize; to exalt; to raise.

God raised up the spirit of this great person, and ennobled his courage and conduct with the entire overthrow of this mighty host.

South.

What can ennoble pots, or slaves, or cowards?

Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards.

Pope.

3. To elevate; to magnify.

None so lovely, sweet and fair,
Or do more ennoble love.

Walker.

4. To make famous or illustrious.

The Spaniards could not as invaders land in Ireland, but only ennobled some of the coasts thereof with shipwrecks.

Bacon.

ENNOBLEMENT. n. s. [from ennoble.]

1. The act of raising to the rank of nobility.

He added during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or advancement in nobility of a few others.

Bacon.

2. Exaltation; elevation; dignity.

The eternal wisdom enriched us with all ennoblements, suitable to the measures of an unstrained goodness.

Glaucille.

ENNUI.* n. s. [French. In the old French it is the same as annoy, or disgust. "Ennuy, annoy, vexation, wearisomeness, tediousness, &c." Cotgrave. "Enneu, ennuy, blessure, douleur, offense, incommodité, &c." Roquefort. Some pretend to derive this word from nuit, because night brings on weariness or heaviness. It is more probably from the Lat. noxia, for the ancient French is also enoy; and the Spanish use enojo in a somewhat similar way. In short, ennui may be etymologically rendered into English, a nuisance; no improper explanation of the thing!] Wearisomeness; fastidiousness; disgust.

The only fault of it is insipidity; which is apt now and then to give a sort of ennui, which makes one form certain little wishes, that signify nothing.

Gray, Lett.

ENODATION. n. s. [enodatio, Lat.]

1. The act of untying a knot.

2. Solution of a difficulty.

Dict.

To ENODE.* v. a. [Lat. enodo.] To declare.

This verb, as well as the substantive enodation which Dr. Johnson notices, is in Cockeram's vocabulary. Dr. Johnson knew no example of the latter, nor do I of either. They are hardly worthy of notice.

ENORM.* adj. [old Fr. enorme; Lat. enormis. A proper word, as we have the adjectives deform, conform, uniform.]

1. Irregular; deviating from rule.

Full lightly it ascends into the clear
And subtle air, devoid of cloudy storm,
Where it doth steady stand, all-uniform,
Pure, pervious, immix'd, — nothing enorm.

Merc, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

2. Deviating from right; wicked.

That they may suffer such punishment as so enorm and unlawful actions have justly deserved.

Sir C. Cornwallis to K. Jam. I. Suppl. to Cabb. p. 99.

ENORMITY.† n. s. [old Fr. enormité.]

1. Deviation from rule; irregularity.

Cockeram.

2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government.

Spenser on Ireland.

That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant.

Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison, Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure. In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

ENO'RMIOUS.† adj. [enormis, Lat. Our word was formerly written enormious, as well as enormous. It is so in Cockeram's vocabulary; and thus used by Jeremy Taylor, "the enormious additions of their artificial heights." Artif. Hands. p. 60.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measures.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton, P. L.

Nature here
Wanton'd, as in her prime; and play'd at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous bliss! Milton, P. L.

2. Excursive beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye. Newton, Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time
From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure. Bullockur.

5. Exceeding in bulk the common measures, always used with some degree of dislike, or horror, or wonder.

A giant-shepherd here his flock maintains,
Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,
A foru enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature, or in face. Pope, Odyssey.

ENO'RMIOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.] Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodward.

ENO'RMIOUSNESS. n. s. [from enormous.] Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENOUGH.† adj. [zenoh, Saxon; ganah, Gothick; genaeg, Dutch; perhaps from the Icel. nög, nogd, plenty. The Greek ixavds, sufficient, must also not be overlooked. Mr. Horne Tooke makes the Saxon word the past participle of the verb zenogan, to multiply; but we see that genoh evidently belongs, without such deduction, to the elder northern languages. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps, when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb To have, or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.] In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why wou'dst thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hadst gold enough, and Emily? Dryden.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENO'UGH, n. s.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endavour'd the union of my country, whilst I continued in publick employments. Temple.
The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough. Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the silvan strains. Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me; in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

Some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little industries and watches. Bacon.

ENO'UGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies. Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution; as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough. Shakspeare.

Henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself,
Enough, enough, and die Shakspeare, K. Lear.

TO ENO'UNCE.* v. a. [Lat. enuncio.] To declare. This word is modern.

Listen to your Maker's voice
Mellifluous, which aloud the mild award
Enounces through your regions. Bally, Day of Judgement.
He does not fear to enounce himself with shouts of exultation. A. Smith.

ENO'W. The plural of enough. In a sufficient number.

The earth hath since born enow bleeding witnesses, that it was no want of true courage. Sidney.

The walls of the church there are enow contented to build: the marbles are polished, the roofs stane with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all. Hooker.

Man hath selfish foes enow besides,
That, day and night, for his destruction wait. Milton, P. L.

My conquering brother will have slaves enow,
To pay his cruel vows for victory. Dryden.

There are at Rome enow modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man. Addison on Medals.

EN PASSANT. adv. [French.] By the way.

TO ENPIERCE.* v. a. See TO EMPIERCE.

I am too sore enpierced with his shaft. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

TO ENQUI'CKEN.* v. a. [from quicken.] To make alive.

He hath not yet enquicken'd men generally with this deiform life; but it hath lyen dead to them, or they to it; that influx being rather suspended than absolutely destroyed, but as the soul to its body, or any part of her body that is numb and dead. Mare, Notes on Psychologia.

TO ENQUI'RE.* [Fr. enquirer.] This word, with all its dependants, is more usually written with in.

E N R

But perhaps it ought to be written with en. See To INQUIRE.

To ENRA'CE. v. a.* [Fr. enraciner.] To implant; to enroot. Obsolete.

Who can aread what creature mote she be,
Whether a creature, or a goddess graced
With heavenly gifts from heaven first enrac'd.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 25.

To ENRA'GE. v. a. [enrager, French.] To irritate; to provoke; to make furious; to exasperate.

The justice of their quarrel should not so much encourage as enrage them, being to revenge the dishonour done to their king, and to enrage deceitful enemies. Hayward.

Enrag'd at this, upon the bawd I flew;
And that which most enrag'd me was, 'twas true. Walsh.

To ENRA'NGE.† v. a. [from range.]

1. To place regularly; to put into order.

In their jaw
Three ranks of iron teeth enrang'd were. Spenser, F. Q.
As fair Diana, in fresh Summer's day,
Beholds her nymphs enrang'd in shady wood. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To rove over.

As this day I was enraunging it, [the forest,]
I chaunst to meet this knight. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 9.

To ENRA'NK. v. a. [from rank.] To place in orderly ranks.

No leisure had he to enrank his men. Shakespeare.

To ENRA'PT. v. a. [from rapt: the participle preterite seems to be enrapt.]

1. To throw into an ecstasy; to transport with enthusiasm.

I myself
Am, like a prophet, suddenly enrapt
To tell thee, that this day is ominous. Shakespeare.

2. In the following quotation it seems erroneously written for enwrapt, involved; wrapt up.

Nor hath he been so enrapt in those studies as to neglect the polite arts of painting and poetry. Arbutnot and Pope.

To ENRA'PTURE.† v. a. [from rapture.] To transport with pleasure; to delight highly.

Oft gazing on her shade, the enraptur'd fair
Decreed the substance well deserv'd her care. Shenstone.

To ENRA'VISH.† v. a. [from ravish.] To throw into extasy; to transport with delight.

What wonder,
Frail men, whose eyes seek heavenly things to see,
At sight thereof so much enravish'd be? Spenser.

They cannot put their blood and spirits into the enravishing emotions of sensitive love and joy. Scott's Works, ii. 124.
Which cannot but enravish every ingenuous breast.
Hallywell, Sav. of Souls, p. 88.

ENRA'VISHMENT. n. s. [from enravish.] Extasy of delight.

They contract a kind of splendour from the seemingly obscuring veil, which adds to the enravishments of her transported admirers. Glanville, Scorpis.

To ENRE'GISTER. v. a.* [Fr. enregistrer.] To enrol; to register.

Him to behold, is on His Works to look,
Which He hath made in beauty excellent;
And in the same, as in a brazen book,
To read enregistered in every nook
His goodness, which His beauty doth declare.

Spenser, Hymn of Heav. Beauty.
He hath himself written and enregistered his own proper faults. Donne, Ill. of the Sept. p. 217.

All he could do was to enregister at length all those privy seals for the vindication of himself to his successors for ever.
Wharton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, p. 101.

To ENRH'EUM. v. a. [enrhumer, French.] To have rheum through cold.

The physician is to enquire where the party hath taken cold or enrhumed. Harvey.

E N R

To ENRI'CH v. a. [enricher, French.]

1. To make wealthy; to make opulent.

The king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter. 1 Sam. xvii. 25.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich. Shakespeare.

Great and glorious Rome, queen of the earth,
So far renown'd, and with the spoils enrich'd
Of nations. Milton, P. H.

Those are so unhappy as to rob others, without enriching themselves. Denham.

2. To fertilize; to make fruitful.

See the sweet brooks in silver mazes creep,
Enrich the meadows, and supply the sleep. Blackmore.

3. To store; to supply with augmentation of any thing desirable.

There is not any one among them that could ever enrich his own understanding with any certain truth, or ever edify others therein. Raleigh, Hist.

ENRI'CHMENT. n. s. [from enrich.]

1. Augmentation of wealth.

2. Amplification; improvement by addition.

I have procured a translation of that book into the general language, not without great and ample additions, and enrichment thereof. Baron, Holy War.

It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time and pains among infinites and unsearchables. Watts, Logic.

To ENRI'DGE. v. a. [from ridge.] To form with longitudinal protuberances or ridges.

He had a thousand noses,
Horns which'd and wav'd like the enridged sea:
It was some fiend. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To ENRI'NG. v. a. [from ring.] To bind round; to encircle.

Ivy so
Enrings the barks fingers of the elm. Shakespeare.

To ENRI'PEN. v. a. [from ripe.] To ripen; to mature; to bring to perfection.

The Summer, how it enripen'd the year;
And Autumn, what our golden harvests were. Donne.

To ENRI'VE. v. a. part. enriven.* [from rive.] To cleave.

The wicked shaft —
Stay'd not, till through his curat it did glide,
And made a grisly wound in his enriven side.
Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 34.

To ENRO'BE. v. a. [from robe.] To dress; to clothe; to habit; to invest.

Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant, flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare.

To ENRO'LL. v. a. [enroller, French.]

1. To insert in a roll, list or register.

There be enrolled amongst the kings forces about thirty thousand men of the Jews. 1 Mac. x. 36.
We find ourselves enrolled in this heavenly family as servants, and as sons. Sprat.

The champions, all of high degree,
Who knighthood lov'd, and deeds of chivalry,
Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold
The names of others, not their own, enroll'd.
Mentes, an ever-honour'd name of old,
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Dryden.

Heroes and heroines of old,
By honour only were enroll'd. Pope, Odys.

Among their brethren of the skies;
To which, though late, shall Stella rise. Swift.

2. To record; to leave in writing.

He swore consent to your succession;
His oath enrolled in the parliament. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Laws, which none shall find
Left them enroll'd; or what the spirit within Shall on the heart engrave.

Milton, P. L.

3. To involve; to inwrap.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's light, Enroll'd in duskish smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser, F. Q.

ENRO'LLER. n. s. [from enrol.] He that enrols; he that registers.

ENRO'LEMENT. n. s. [from enrol.] Register; writing in which any thing is recorded; record.

The king himself caused to be enrolled, and testified by a notary public; and delivered the enrolments, with his own hands, to the bishop of Salisbury. Davies on Ireland.

TO ENRO'OT. v. a. [from root.] To fix by the root; to implant deep.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shakespeare.

TO ENRO'UND. v. a. [from round.] To environ; to surround; to encircle; to enclose.

Upon his royal face there is no note
Now dread an army hath enrounded him. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

ENS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Any being or existence.

2. [In chymistry.] Some things that are pretended to contain all the qualities or virtues of the ingredients they are drawn from in a little room.

ENSAMPLE. n. s. [esempio, Italian, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old French word ensample, the usage of which Lacombe has traced to the tenth century.] Example; pattern; subject of imitation. This orthography is now justly disused.

Such life should be the honour of your light;
Such death, the sad ensample of your might. Spenser, Sonn.
Ye have us for an ensample. Phil. iii. 17.

Such as would be willing to make use of our ensamples to do the same thing, where there is not the same necessity, may not be able to touch our practice for their excuse. Sanderson.

TO ENSAMPLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exemplify; to shew by example; to give as a copy.

I have followed all the ancient poets historical: first, Homer, who, in the person of Agamemnon, ensampled a good governour and a virtuous man. Spenser on Ireland.

TO ENSANGUINE. v. a. [sanguis, Latin; ensanguanter, French.] To smear with gore; to suffuse with blood.

With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms the ensanguin'd field, Deserted. Milton, P. L.

Ensanguin'd man
Is now become the lion of the plain,
And worse. Thomson, Spring.

As the paths of fate we tread,
Wading through the ensanguin'd field. Gray, Ode.

TO ENSCHEDULE. v. a. [from schedule.] To insert in a schedule or writing.

You must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands,

TO ENSCONCE. v. a. [from sconce, a kind of fortification.] To cover as with a fort; to secure.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet your rogue will ensconce your rage, your cat-a-mountain looks under the shelter of your honour. Shakespeare.
She shall not see us: I will ensconce me behind the arras. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

We make trifles of terrors, ensconcing ourselves in seeming knowledge. Shakespeare.

Convey him to the sanctuary of rebels,
Nestorius' house, where our proud brother has Ensconced himself. Beaum. and Fl. The Coronation.

A sort of error to ensconce
Absurdity and ignorance. Hudibras.

This he courageously invaded,
And having enter'd, barricado'd,
Ensconced himself as formidable
As could be, underneath a table. Hudibras.

TO ENSEA'L.* v. a. [from seal.] To impress; to mark as with a seal.

Climb'd mountains, where the wanton cliffing dallies,
Then with soft steps enseal'd the meek'en'd valleys. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

TO ENSEA'M.† v. a. [from seam.]

1. To sow up; to enclose by a seam or juncture of needlework.

* A name engraved in the revestary of the temple, one stole away, and enscamed it in his thigh. Camden.

2. To fructify; to fatten. [Fr. ensemencer.]

And bounteous Trent, that in himself ensemams
Both thirty sorts of fish, and thirty sundry streams. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 33.

ENSEA'MED.* adj. [from seam.] Greasy. See SEAM.

The rank sweat of an enscamed bed. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO ENSEA'R, v. a. [from sear.] To cauterise; to stanch or stop with fire.

Ensear thy fertile and conception womb;
Let it no more bring out t' ingrateful man. Shakespeare.

TO ENSEA'RCH.* v. n. [from search.] To try to find.

The property whereof, [the understanding,] is to espy, seek for, ensearch, and find out. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 201. b.

ENSEMBLE.* n. s. [French; Latin, in and simul.]

One with another; a relative proportion of parts to the whole; and sometimes work or composition, considered together; and not in parts. It has been adopted by us, of late years, more particularly in respect to statuary, painting, and architecture; as, "all those pieces of building make a fine ensemble; the picture is good, taking the parts separately, but the tout ensemble is bad."

We may see in successive steps the groups of those figures and facts only which are immediately local and temporary; but the ensemble of the piece will be hid from us and unintelligible. Pownall on Antig. (1782.) p. 81.

TO ENSHIELD.† v. a. [from shield.] To shield; to cover; to protect. In the following instance enshield is a contraction of the participle enshielded.

These black masks
Proclaim an enshield beauty, ten times louder
Than beauty could display. Shakespeare.

TO ENSHRI'NE. v. a. [from shrine.] To enclose in a chest or cabinet; to preserve and secure as a thing sacred.

He seems
A phoenix, gaz'd by all as that sole bird,
When, to enshrine his reliques in the sun's Bright temple, to Egyptian Thebes he flies. Milton, P. L.

The sots combine
With pious care a monkey to enshrine. Tate's Juvenal.

Fair fortune next, with looks serene and kind,
Receives 'em, in her ancient fane enshrin'd. Addison.

ENSIFORM. adj. [ensiformis, Lat.] Having the shape of a sword, as the xiphocides or ensiform cartilage.

ENSIGN. n. s. [enseigne, Fr.]

1. The flag or standard of a regiment.

Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still. Shakespeare.
The Turks still pressing on, got up to the top of the walls with eight ensigns, from whence they had repulsed the defenders. Kneller, Hist.

ENS

Men taking occasion from the qualities, wherein they observe often several individuals to agree, range them into sorts, in order to their naming under which individuals, according to their conformity to this or that abstract idea, come to be ranked as under ensigns. Locke.

2. Any signal to assemble.

He will lift up an ensign to the nations from far. Isa. v. 26.

3. Badge; or mark of distinction, rank or office.

Princes that fly, their sceptres left behind,
Contempt or pity, where they travel, find;
The ensigns of our pow'r about we bear,
And ev'ry land pays tribute to the fair. Waller.

The marks or ensigns of virtues contribute, by their nobleness, to the ornament of the figures; as the decorations belonging to the liberal arts, to war or sacrifices. Dryden.

4. The officer of foot who carries the flag. [Formerly written ancient.]

To ENSIGN.* v. a. [old Fr. ensigner, to shew; Lat. insignire.] To mark with some sign; to distinguish by an ornament, as in heraldry; which expression is still in use.

Henry but join'd the roses, that ensign'd
Particular families; but this hath join'd
The rose and thistle. B. Jonson, Marques.

ENSIGNBEARER. n. s. [ensign and bear.] He that carries the flag; the ensign.

If it be true that the giants ever made war against heaven, he had been a fit ensignbearer for that company. Sidney.

ENSIGNCY.* n. s. [from ensign.] The place and quality of the officer of foot who carries the flag.

ENSKIED.* part. adj. [from sky.] Placed in heaven; made immortal.

I hold you as a thing enski'd, and sainted;
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit;
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

To ENSLAVE. v. a. [from slave.]

1. To reduce to servitude; to deprive of liberty.

The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,
Shall, with their freedom lost, all virtue lose. Milton, P. L.

I to do this! I, whom you once thought brave,
To sell my country, and my king enslave! Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;
He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave. Dryden, Æn.

He is certainly the most subjected, the most enslav'd, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

While the balance of power is equally held, the ambition of private men gives neither danger nor fear, nor can possibly enslave their country. Swift.

2. To make over to another as his slave or bondman.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he hath first enslav'd himself to life and death, to pleasure or pain, to hope or fear: command those passions, and you are freer than the Partian king. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslav'd to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of religion. Tillotson.

A man, not having the power of his own life, cannot by compact, or his own consent, enslave himself to any one, nor put himself under the absolute arbitrary power of another, to take away life when he pleases. Locke.

ENSLAVEMENT. n. s. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; slavery; abject subjection.

The children of Israel, according to their method of sinning, after mercies, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection. South.

ENSLAVER. n. s. [from enslave.] He that reduces others to a state of servitude.

What indignation in her mind,
Against enslavers of mankind! Swift.

To ENSNARE.* v. a. [from snare.] To entrap.

Dr. Johnson admits ensnare to be more frequent than insnare, in his notice of the latter. See To

ENS

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared. Job, xxxiv. 30.

To ENSNARE.* v. a.

1. To entangle. [from the verb snarl, in the same sense, which Spenser uses; though Dr. Johnson, citing only the Decay of Piety under that word, unjustly doubts the authority of it. See To SNARL.] They in awayt would closely him ensnare, Ere to his den he backward could recoyle. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 9.

2. To snarl; to gnash the teeth. Cockeram.

To ENSPHERE.* v. a. [from sphere.]

1. To place in a sphere.
In thy little chaos all's enspher'd,
And though abridg'd, yet in full greatness rear'd. J. Hall, Poem, (1646) p. 54.

2. To form into roundness.

One shall ensphere thine eyes, another shall Impearl thy teeth, &c. Carew's Poem, p. 95.

To ENSTAMP.* v. a. [from stamp.] To fix a mark by impressing it.

Nature hath enstamped upon the soul of man the certainty of a Deity. Hewyt, Sermon (1658) p. 194.
Money enstamped upon with the figure of a lamb. Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 51.

To ENSTE'EP.* See To INSTE'EP.

To ENSTY'LE.* v. a. [from style.] To name; to call.

Herself to entile
The Stonenidge's best-belov'd, first wonder of the isle. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

That renowned ile,
Which all men beauty's garden-plot enstyle. Browne, Brit. Past.

To ENSUE.† v. a. [ensuivre, French, Dr. Johnson says; but it is the Norman French ensuer, to pursue.] To follow; to pursue.

Eschew evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it. Psalms xxxiv. 14.

But now these Epicures begin to smile,
And say, my doctrine is more safe than true;
And that I fondly do myself beguile,
While these receiv'd opinions I ensue. Davies.

To ENSUE. v. n.

1. To follow as a consequence to premises.

Let this be granted, and it shall hereupon plainly ensue, that the light of Scripture once shining in the world, all other light of nature is therewith in such sort drowned, that now we need it not. Hooker.

2. To succeed in a train of events, or course of time.

The man was noble;
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Bishops are placed by collation of the king, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.

Of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue. Milton, P. L.

With mortal heat each other shall pursue;
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

Impute not then those ills which may ensue,
To me, but those who with incessant hate
Pursue my life. Rowe, Ambit. Stepmother.

Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan;
Silence ensu'd, and thus the nymph began. Pope.

ENSURABLE.* See INSURABLE.

ENSURANCE.† n. s. [from ensure.] It is now more usually written insurance.

1. Exemption from hazard, obtained by the payment of a certain sum.

There will be no ensurance here to make you amends, as there is in the case of fire. Marq. of Halifax.

2. The sum paid for security.

ENSURANCER. n. s. [from ensurance.] He who under-

The vain assurers of life,
And they who most perform'd, and promis'd less,
Ev'n Short and Hobbes, forsook th' unequal strife. Dryden.
To ENSURE.† v. a. [from sure, assurer, French.
Now generally written insure.]

1. To ascertain; to make certain; to secure.
It is easy to entail debts on succeeding ages, but how to ensure peace for any term of years is difficult enough. Swift.

2. To exempt any thing from hazard by paying a certain sum, on condition of being reimbursed for miscarriage.

3. To promise reimbursement of any miscarriage for a certain reward stipulated.

A mendicant, contracted with a country fellow for a quantity of corn, to ensure his sheep for that year. L'Estrange.

4. To bind by promise of marriage. Not now in use.

There grew such a secret love between them, that at the length they were insured together, intending to marry.

Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.
I marvel not a little of thy folly, that wouldst thus entangle and ensure thyself with a foolish girl yonder in the court, Anne Bullaine. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

ENSURE.† n. s. [from ensure.]

1. One who makes contracts of insurance; one who for a certain sum exempts any thing from hazard.

Let it be tried, and I will once set up the ensurer's office, that whatever goes out on that voyage, shall never miss to come home with gain. Hammond, Works, iv. 481.

2. That which secures, or makes sure.

O Temperance! — thou prolonger of life, thou insurer of pleasure, thou promoter of business, thou guardian of the person, thou preserver of the understanding, thou parent of every intellectual improvement and every moral virtue!

Hay, Ess. on Deformity, p. 25.

To ENSWEEP.* v. a. [from sweep.] To pass over with swiftness.

Of, in this season, silent from the North
A blaze of meteors shoots; ensweeping first
The lower skies. Thomson, Autumn.

ENTABLATURE.† } n. s. [old Fr. entablature, and en- ENTABLEMENT. } tablement; Cotgrave.] The architrave, frise, and cornice of a pillar; being in effect the extremity of the flooring, which is either supported by pillars, or by a wall, if there be no columns. Harris.

Must not the whole entablature, with its projections, be so proportioned, as to seem great, but not heavy, light, but not little? Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To ENTACKLE.* v. a. [from tackle.] To supply with instruments of sailing.

Your storm-driven ship I repaired new,
So well entackled, what wind so ever blow,
No stormy tempest your barge shall overthrow. Skelton's Poems, p. 26.

ENTAIL.† n. s. [feudum talliatum, from the French entailé, cut, from tailler, to cut.]

1. The estate entailed or settled, with regard to the rule of its descent; that is, cut off from being an absolute fee.

2. The rule of descent settled for any estate.

Which declares a fine duly levied by tenant in tail to be a complete bar to him and his heirs, and all other persons claiming under such entail. Blackstone.

3. Engraver's work; inlay. [intaglio, Ital. from intagliare.] Obsolete.

Well [it] appeared to have been of old
A work of rich entail, and curious mold
Woven with anticks and wild imagery. Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTAIL.† v. a. [tailler, entailier, Fr. to cut.]

1. To settle the descent of any estate so that it cannot be by any subsequent possessor bequeathed at pleasure.

I here entail

The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever. Shakespeare.

Had Richard unconstrain'd resign'd the throne,

A king can give no more than is his own:

The title stood entail'd, had Richard had a son. Dryden.

2. To fix unalienably upon any person or thing.

None ever had a privilege of infallibility entailed to all he said. Digby on Bodies.

The intemperate and unjust transmit their bodily infirmities and diseases to their children, and entail a secret curse upon their estates. Tillotson.

3. To carve. [Ital. intagliare.] Not now in use.

The chapitre house

Corven, and covered, and queyntelyche entayled

With semliche sculture. P. Ploughman's Crede.

Golden bends, which were entail'd

With curious antickes. Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTAIL. v. n. To cut. Obsolete.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,

Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,

That a large purple stream adown their giamonds falls.

Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTAME.† v. a. [from tame.] To tame; to subjugate; to subdue.

My sonne, if thou thy conscience

Entamed hast in such a wise.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eyeballs, and your cheek of cream,

That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

To ENTANGLE.† v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Gothick tagl, hair.]

1. To inwrap or ensnare with something not easily extricable, as a net; or something adhesive, as briars.

2. To lose in multiplied involutions; as in a labyrinth.

3. To twist, or confuse in such a manner as that a separation cannot easily be made; to make an entangled knot.

4. To involve in difficulties; to embarrass; to perplex.

Now all labour,

Marrs what it does, yea very force entangles

Itself with strength.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

5. To puzzle; to bewilder.

The duke, being questioned, neither held silence as he might, nor constantly denied it, but entangled himself in his doubtful tale. Hayward.

I suppose a great part of the difficulties that perplex men's thoughts, and entangle their understandings, would be easily resolved. Locke.

6. To ensnare by captious questions or artful talk.

The Pharisees took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk. St. Matt. xxii. 15.

7. To distract with variety of cares.

No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. 2 Tim. ii. 4.

8. To multiply the intricacies or difficulties of a work.

ENTANGLEMENT.† n. s. [from entangle.]

1. Involution of any thing intricate or adhesive.

The sad, dangerous, and almost fatal entanglements of this corporeal world. More, Preexist. of the Soul, (1647), Pref.

It is a truth both clear from scripture, and ratified by the experience of all believers, that there was never any one, were his entanglements in sin never so great, his corruptions never so raging, but, if he was enabled to wait upon mercy in an earnest constant use of prayer for the removal of his sin, became in the end a conqueror. South, Serm. vi. 459.

The force of temptation, the entanglements of the flesh. South, Serm. vii. 230.

2. Perplexity; puzzle.

The most improved spirits are frequently caught in the entanglements of a tenacious imagination. Glanville, Scrypsis.

There will be no greater entanglements, touching the notion of God and his providence. More, Divine Dialogues.

It is to fence against the entanglements of equivocal words, and the art of sophistry, that distinctions have been multiplied. Locke.

ENTANGLER. n. s. [from entangle.] One that entangles.

To ENTENDER. * v. a. [from tender.] To treat with kindness; to protect.

Virtue alone entenders us for life;

I wrong her much; entenders us for ever. Young, Night Th. 9.

To ENTER. † v. a. [entrer, French.]

1. To go or come into any place.

I, with the multitude of my redeem'd,

Shall enter heaven, long absent.

Milton, P. L.

A king of repute and learning entered the lists against him.

Atterbury.

2. To initiate in a business, method, or society.

He is an excellent fish — and he is also excellent to enter a young angler, for he is a greedy biter. Walton, Angler.

The eldest being thus entered, and then made the fashion, it would be impossible to hinder them. Locke.

3. To introduce or admit into any counsel.

They of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,

And know how we proceed.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. To set down in a writing.

Mr. Phang, have you enter'd the action?

— It is enter'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Agues and fevers are entered promiscuously, yet in the few bills they have been distinguished. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To ENTER. v. n.

1. To come in; to go in.

Be not slothful to go and to enter to possess the land.

Judges, xviii. 9.

Other creature here,

Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton, P. L.

2. To penetrate mentally; to make intellectual entrance.

He is particularly pleased with Livy for his manner of telling a story, and with Sallust for his entering into internal principles of action. Addison, Spect.

They were not capable of entering into the numerous concurring springs of action. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

3. To engage in.

The French king hath often entered on several expensive projects, on purpose to dissipate wealth. Addison on the War.
Gentlemen did not care to enter upon business till after their morning draught. Tatler.

4. To be initiated in.

O pity and shame, that those who to live well

Enter'd so fair, should turn aside!

Milton, P. L.

As soon as they once entered into a taste of pleasure, politeness, and magnificence, they fell into a thousand violences, conspiracies and divisions. Addison on Italy.

ENTERDEAL. n. s. [entre and deal.] Reciprocal transactions. Obsolete.

For he is practis'd well in policy,

And therefore doth his cunning most apply;

To learn the enterdeal of princes strange,

To mark th' intent of counsels, and the change

Of states.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

ENTERER. * n. s. [from enter.] One who is making a beginning or first entrance.

Who dreams of nature free from nature's strife?

Who dreams of perfect happiness below? —

The hope-flush'd enterer on the stage of life,

The youth to knowledge unchastis'd by woe.

Seward's Letters, (1786,) i. 185.

ENT

ENTERING. n. s. [from enter.] Entrance; passage into a place.

It is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in.

Isaiah, xxiii. 1.

To ENTERLA'CE. † v. a. [entreclasser, French.] To intermix; to interweave.

Also in those daunces were enterlaced ditties of wanton love, or rillaudrye, with frequent remembrance of the most vile idols.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 63.

This lady walked outright, till she might see her enter into a fine close arbour: it was of trees, whose branches so lovingly enterlaced one another, that it could resist the strongest violence of the sight. Sidney.

ENTERO'CELE. n. s. [enteroccele, Latin.] A rupture from the bowels pressing through or dilating the peritonæum, so as to fall down into the groin. The remedy in such cases, is chiefly by trusses and bolsters. Quincy.

If the intestine only is fallen, it becomes an enteroccele; if the omentum or epiploon, epiplocele; and if both, enteroepiplocele. Sharp, Surgery.

ENTERO'LOGY. n. s. [έντερον and λόγος.] The anatomical account of the bowels and internal parts.

ENTERO'MPHALOS. n. s. [έντερον and ὀμφαλος.] An umbilical or navel rupture.

ENTERPARLANCE. n. s. [entre and parler, French.] Parley; mutual talk; conference.

During the enterparlance the Scots discharged against the English, not without breach of the laws of the field. Hayward.

ENTERPLEA'DER. n. s. [entre and plead.] The discussing of a point incidentally falling out, before the principal cause can take end. For example: two several persons, being found heirs to land by two several officers in one county, the king is brought in doubt whether livery ought to be made; and therefore, before livery be made to either, they must enterplead; that is, try between themselves who is the right heir. Cowel.

ENTERPRISE. n. s. [entreprise, French.] An undertaking of hazard; an arduous attempt.

Now is the time to execute mine enterprises to the destruction of the enemies. Judith, ii. 5.

What on Warwick to this enterprise. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprise, and give the bride.

Dryden.

To ENTERPRISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To undertake; to attempt; to essay.

Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest

Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid.

Milton, P. L.

Princes were only chiefs of those assemblies, by whose consultations and authority the great actions were resolved and enterpris'd.

Temple.

An epick poem, or the heroick action of some great commander, enterpris'd for the common good and honour of the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well written now as it was of old by the heathens.

Dryden.

Haste then, and lose no time:

The business must be enterpris'd this night;

We must surprise the court in its delight.

Dryden.

2. To receive; to entertain. Obsolete.

In goodly garments, that her well became,

Fair marching forth in honourable wise,

Him at the threshold met, and well did enterprise.

Spenser, F. Q.

ENTERPRISER. † n. s. [from enterprise.] A man of enterprise; one who undertakes great things; one who engages himself in important and dangerous designs.

They commonly proved great enterprisers with happy success.

Hayward on Edw. VI.

Young, Night Th. 8.

TO ENTERTA'IN. v. a. [entretenir, French.]

1. To converse with; to talk with.

His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not readily furnished to entertain any one in. Locke.

2. To treat at the table.

You shall find an apartment fitted up for you, and shall be every day entertained with beef or mutton of my own feeding. Addison, Spect.

3. To receive hospitably.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Heb. xiii. 2.

Heav'n, set ope thy everlasting gates,
To entertain my vows of thanks and praise. Shakspeare.

4. To keep in one's service.

How many men would you require to the furnishing of this which you take in hand? And how long space would you have them entertained? Spenser on Ireland.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I'll weep and sigh,

And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me. Shakspeare, Cymb.

5. To reserve in the mind.

This purpose God can entertain towards us. Decay of Piety.

6. To please; to amuse; to divert.

David entertained himself with the meditations of God's law, not his hidden decrees or counsels. Decay of Piety.

They were capable of entertaining themselves on a thousand subjects, without running into the common topics. Addison.

The history of the Royal Society shews how well philosophy becometh a narration: the progress of knowledge is an entertaining as that of arms. Felton on the Classics.

In gardens, art can only reduce the beauties of nature to a figure which the common eye may better take in, and is therefore more entertained with. Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.

7. To admit with satisfaction.

Reason can never permit the mind to entertain probability, in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

ENTERTA'IN.* n. s. [Fr. entretenir.] Often used by Spenser; now obsolete.] Entertainment.

But need, that answers not to all requests,
Bade them not look for better entertainme.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 27.

After all her princely entertainme. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 37.

Your entertain shall be,

As doth befit our honour and your worth.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

ENTERTA'INER. n. s. [from entertain.]

1. He that keeps others in his service.

He was, in his nature and constitution of mind, not very apprehensive or forecasting of future events afar off, but an entertainer of fortune by the day. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Righteousness is immortal, and will immortalize the entertainers of it. Cudworth, Serm. p. 89.

2. He that treats others at his table.

[They] proved ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers. Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace.

He shews both to the guests and to the entertainer their great mistake. Snodgrass.

It is little the sign of a wise or good man to suffer temperance to be transgressed, in order to purchase the repute of a generous entertainer. Atterbury.

3. He that receives sincerely and reverentially.

We draw nigh to God, when, upon our conversion to him, we become the receptacles and entertainers of his good Spirit. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 89.

4. He that pleases, diverts, or amuses.

Then did the third pageant present themselves unto him — but he thought he saw all the forenamed entertainers at once — leap, plunge, and drown themselves in puddles. Nash, Terrors of the Night, (1594.)

ENTERTA'ININGLY.* adv. [from the part. entertaining.]

In an amusing or diverting manner.

ENT

My conversation, says Dryden very entertainingly of himself, is dull and slow, my humour saturnine and reserved: In short, I am none of those who endeavour to break jests in company, or make repartees! Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

ENTERTA'INMENT. n. s. [from entertain, old Fr. entretenement.]

1. Conversation.

The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainments to Laertes, before you fall to play. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Treatment at the table; convivial provision.

Arrived there, the little house they fill,
Ne look for entertainment where none was;
Rest is their feast, and all things at their will,
The noblest mind the best contentment has. Spenser, F. Q.

With British bounty in his ship he feasts
Th' Hesperian princes, his amazed guests,
To find that watry wilderness exceed
The entertainment of their great Madrid. Waller.

3. Hospitable reception.

His office was to give entertainment,
And lodging unto all that came and went.

Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 37.

4. Reception; admission.

I am next to consider that simplicity of manners, which should always accompany the sincere entertainment and practice of the precepts of the Gospel. Sprat, Serm. (1676.)

It is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment, but much more difficult to conceive how it should be universally propagated. Tillotson.

5. The state of being in pay as soldiers or servants.

Have you an army ready, say you?

— A most royal one. The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. Shakspeare, Coriol.

6. Payment of soldiers or servants. Now obsolete.

The entertainment of the general, upon his first arrival, was but six shillings and eight pence. Davies on Ireland.

The captains did covenant with the king to serve him with certain numbers of men, for certain wages and entertainments. Davies on Ireland.

Drawing out the war in Gallia,

For which thou late triumph'st; dissembling long

That Sacerdote to be an enemy,

Only to make thy entertainment more. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

7. Amusement; diversion.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason, for the entertainment of the time, that he ask me questions than that I ask you. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Passions ought to be our servants, and not our masters; to give us some agitation for entertainment, but never to throw reason out of its seat. Temple.

8. Dramatick performance; the lower comedy.

A great number of dramatick entertainments are not comedies, but five-act farces. Gay.

ENTERTA'ISSUED. adj. [entre and tissue.] Interwoven or intermixed with various colours or substances.

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The entertissued robe of gold and pearl. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

ENTHEAT.* adj. [Greek ἐνθός.] Our old word for enthusiastick. Ash has entheal, "divinely inspired."

His genius justly, in an entheal rage,
Oft lash'd the dull-sworn factors for the stage.

Verses by W. Hodgson, Pref. to B. Jonson's Works.

TO ENTHERA'L.* See TO INTHRAL. Milton, however, writes it with en.

TO ENTHRI'L.* v. a. [from thrill.] To pierce; to penetrate.

A dart we saw how it did light
Right on her breast, and there witha' pale Death
Enthrilling it to reave her of her breath.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

To ENTHRONE.† v. a. [Fr. enthroner.]

1. To place on a regal seat.

Mercy is above this accept'd sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
It is an attribute to God himself. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

On a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself, in chairs of gold,
Were publicly enthron'd. Shakespeare.

Beneath a sculptur'd arch he sits enthron'd,
The peers, encircling, form an awful round. Pope, Odys.

2. To invest with sovereign authority.

Henry III.—in disinherit and seizing on his subjects' possessions, without judicial course, beginning with those two great potentates Richard earl of Cornwall, his brother, and William le Marshal earl of Pembroke, bred most intestine trouble twixt him and his barons, although sometime discontinued, yet not extinguish'd even till his declining days of enthroned felicity. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

This pope was no sooner elected and enthroned, but that he began to exercise his new rapines. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To ENTHRONIZE.* v. a. To enthrone.

Right princely virtue, fit to reign,
Enthroniz'd in her spirit remain.

Davies, Hymns of Astraea, (1622,) H. xxii.

With what grace

Doth mercy sit enthroniz'd on thy face!

J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 78.

To ENTHUNDER.* v. n. [from thunder.] To make a noise like thunder.

Against them all she proudly did enthunder,
Until her masts were beaten over-board. Mir. for Mag. p. 850.

ENTHUSIASM.† n. s. [ἐνθουσιασμός, Gr. enthusiasme, old Fr. Cotgrave. The earliest example of our word, given by Dr. Johnson, is that from Dryden. About half a century before Dryden's work, the word was written, like its Greek original, "enthusiasmos," and defined "poetical fury." V. Cockeram's Vocabulary. Fleckno, upon whom Dryden exercised his satire, uses our word in the plural; which is not common. "With thy enthusiasms come." Invocation of Silence.]

1. A vain belief of private revelation; a vain confidence of divine favour or communication.

Enthusiasm is founded neither on reason nor divine revelation, but rises from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain. Locke.

2. Heat of imagination; violence of passion; confidence of opinion.

It [enthusiasme] makes us give a stronger assent to the conclusion than the evidence of the premises will warrant, then, reason begins to be betrayed; and then enthusiasme properly commences. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 40.

3. Elevation of fancy; exaltation of ideas.

Imaging is, to itself, the very height and life of poetry, which, by a kind of enthusiasme, or extraordinary emotion of soul, snakes it seem to us that we behold those things which the poet paints. Dryden, Jew. Pref.

ENTHUSIAST.† n. s. [ἐνθουσιастα, Gr. enthusiasta, Lat.]

1. One who vainly imagines a private revelation; one who has a vain confidence of his intercourse with God.

Enthusiasts pretend that they have the gift of prophecy by dreams. Pagitt's Heresiography, (1654,) p. 29.

Let an enthusiast be principled that he or his teacher is inspired, and acted by an immediate communication of the Divine Spirit, and you in vain bring the evidence of clear reasons against his doctrine. Locke.

2. One of a hot imagination, or violent passions.

Chapman seems to have been of an arrogant turn, and an enthusiast in poetry. Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.

3. One of elevated fancy, or exalted ideas.

Her little soul is ravish'd, and so poss'd
Into loose extasies, that she is plac'd
Above herself, Musick's enthusiast. Crashaw, Musick's Duell.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before. Dryden.

ENTHUSIASTICAL.† } adj. [ἐνθουσιαστικός, Gr.]
ENTHUSIASTICK.

1. Persuaded of some communication with the Deity.

He pretended not to any seraphick enthusiastick raptures, or inimitable unaccountable transports of devotion. Calamy.

Did ever you, or any body else, ever see such a place as Heaven? For God's sake, therefore, leave those enthusiastick whimsies, and talk like men.

Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. p. 133.

2. Vehemently hot in any cause.

3. Elevated in fancy; exalted in ideas.
An enthusiastick or prophetick style, by reason of the eagerness of the fancy, doth not always follow the even thread of discourse. Burnet.

At last, sublim'd

To rapture and enthusiastick heat,
We feel the present Deity. Thomson.

ENTHUSIASTICK.* n. s. An enthusiast; one who vainly pretends an intercourse with God.

The dervis and other santoons, or enthusiasticks, being in the croud, express their zeal by turning round.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 326.

ENTHYMEM. n. s. [ἐνθύμημα, Gr.] An argument consisting only of an antecedent and consequential proposition; a syllogism where the major proposition is suppressed, and only the minor and consequence produced in words.

Playing much upon the simple or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymems unto the people, they take up popular conceits. Brown, Vulg. Err.

What is an enthymem, quoth Cornelius? Why, an enthymem, replied Crambe, is when the major is indeed married to the minor, but the marriage kept secret. Arbutnot and Pope.

To ENTICE.† v. a. [of uncertain etymology, Dr.

Johnson says. The old Fr. enticer, "exciter, provoquer," is the parent of our word. V. Roques. Gloss. Lang. Rom.] To allure; to attract; to draw by blandishments or hopes to something sinful or destructive.

The readiest way to entangle the mind with false doctrine, is first to entice the will to wanton living.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

If a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, he shall surely endow her to be his wife. Ex. xxii. 16.

So sang the syrens, with enchanting sound,
Enticing all to listen, and be drown'd.

Granville.

ENTICEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. enticement, "impulsion, instigation." Roq.]

1. The act or practice of alluring to ill.

Suppose we that the sacred word of God can at their hands receive due honour, by whose enticement the holy ordinances of the church endure every where open contempt? Hooker.

And here to every thirsty wanderer,
By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
With many murmurs mixt. Milton, Comus.

2. The means by which one is allured to ill; blandishment; allurement.

Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

In all these instances we must separate intreaty and enticements from deceit or violence.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

ENT

ENTI' CER. † n. s. [from entice.] One that allures to ill.
Rose-coloured cheeks are of themselves potent enticers.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

A mincing gait, a decent and an affected pace, are most powerful enticers.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 477.

These writers—traduce her as the enticer of her husband into the basest idolatries.
Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

ENTI' CING. * n. s. [from entice.] The act of alluring to evil.

The third and last sign that I shall mention, of a temptation's attaining its full hour or maturity, is a more than usual restlessness and importunity in its enticings or instigations.
South, Serm. vi. 269.

ENTI' CINGLY. adv. [from entice.] Charmingly; in a winning manner.

She strikes a lute well,
Sings most enticingly.
Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

ENTIERTY. † n. s. [old Fr. entiertie; Lat. integritas.] The whole; not barely a part.

Sometime the attorney thrusteth into the writ the uttermost quantity; or else setteth down an entierty, where but a moiety was to be passed.
Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

ENTIRE. † adj. [entier, Fr. intiero, Ital. integer, Lat. Our word was formerly written cnteer, as by Lydgate; and, in our old lexicography, "Entier or whole: Entirly: Entierness." Huloet.]

1. Whole; undivided.

It is not safe to divide, but to extol the entire; still in general.
Bacon, Collect. of Good and Evil.

2. Unbroken; complete in its parts.

An antique model of the famous Laocoon is entire in those parts where the statue is maimed.
Addison on Italy.

Water and earth, composed of old worn particles and fragments of particles, would not be of the same nature and texture now with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning.
Newton, Opticks.

3. Full; complete; comprising all requisites in itself.

The church of Rome hath rightly considered that publick prayer is a duty entire in itself, a duty requisite to be performed much oftener than sermons can be made.
Hooker.

An action is entire when it is complete in all its parts; or, as Aristotle describes it, when it consists of a beginning, a middle, and an end.
Spectator, No. 267.

4. Sincere; hearty.

Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects that stand Aloof from the entire point.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He run a course more entire with the king of Arragon, but more laboured and officious with the king of Castile.
Bacon.

5. Firm; sure; solid; fixed.

Entire and sure the monarch's rule must prove,
Who founds her greatness on her subject's love.
Prior.

6. Unmingled; unallayed.

Wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire.
Milton, P. L.

7. Honest; firmly adherent; faithful.

No man had ever a heart more entire to the king, the church, or his country; but he never studied the easiest ways to those ends.
Clarendon.

They had many persons, of whose entire affections they were well assured.
Clarendon.

8. In full strength; with vigour unabated; with power unbroken.

Then back to fight again, new breathed and entire.
Spenser, F. Q.

9. Impartial.

They were therefore trusted with arbitrary power, because it was foreseen that juries were not like to be entire.
Clarendon, Life, ii. 240.

10. Inward.

Casting flakes of lustfull fire,
From his false eyes, into their hearts and parts entire.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 48.

ENTI'RELY. adv. [from entire.]

ENT

1. In the whole; without division.

Euphrates, running, sinketh partly into the lakes of Chalden, and falls not entirely into the Persian sea.
Raleigh.

2. Completely; fully.

Here finish'd he, and all that he had made
View'd and beheld! all was entirely good.
Milton, P. L.

Chyle may be said to be a vegetable juice in the stomach and intestines; as it passeth into the lacteals it grows still more animal, and when it has circulated often with the blood, it is entirely so.
Arbuthnot.

General consent entirely altered the whole frame of their government.
Swift.

3. With firm adherence; faithfully.

Which when his pensive lady saw from far,
Great woe and sorrow did her soul assay,
As weening that the sad end of the war,
And gan to highest God entirely pray.
Spenser, F. Q.

ENTI'RENESS. † n. s. [from entire.]

1. Totality; completeness; fulness.

But I
Should injure nature, virtue, and destiny,
Should I divide and discontinue so
Virtue, which did in one entireness grow. Donne, Poems, p. 246.
Doting antiquaries—more admire the rust or fragments of coins, than their splendour or entireness.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 216.

In an arch, each single stone, which, if severed from the rest, would be perhaps defenceless, is sufficiently secured by the solidity and entireness of the whole fabrick, of which it is a part.
Boyle.

2. Honesty; integrity.

3. Intimacy; familiarity; friendship.

True Christian love may be separated from acquaintance, and acquaintance from entireness.
Bp. Hall, Holy Observ.

A little friendship with such is enough; the less communion with any of God's enemies, the more safety; and sure I am, that those who affect a familiar entireness with such, bewray either too much boldness, or too little conscience.
Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 77.

ENTI'RETY. * n. s. [from entire.] Completeness. See

ENTIERTY.

This is the natural and regular consequence of the union and entirety of their interest.
Blackstone.

ENTITATIVE. * adj. [from entity.] Considered by itself; abstracted from all circumstances.

Metaphysicians have here a noble field for their abstracted flights, whether, according to Durandus, there be any divine concourse in sig? Whether, with others, moral evil has any real essence, or real efficient cause, or only deficient? Whether there be any pure evil? Whether it be a privation of being, or a real positive being? Whether it has not some natural good for its subject, and so the entitative material act of sin be physically or morally good? &c.
Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 340.

ENTITATIVELY. * adv. [from entitative.] A thing is said to be taken or considered entitatively, or "secundum entitatem," when considered nakedly, and precisely, according to what it is in itself, without any thing extrinsick; as, Peter, entitatively taken, is Peter as a thing, a substance, a man, &c. without any regard to his being a lord, a husband, learned, &c.
Chambers.

TO ENTI'TLE. v. a. [entituler, French.]

1. To grace or dignify with a title or honourable appellation.

2. To give a title or discriminative appellation; as, to entitle a book.

Besides the Scripture, the books which they call ecclesiastical were thought not unworthy to be brought into publick audience, and with that name they entitled the books which we term Apocryphal.
Hooker.

Next favourable thou,
Who highly thus to entitle me vouchsaf'st,
Far other name deserving.
Milton, P. L.

3. To superscribe; or prefix as a title.

How ready zeal for party is to entitle christianity to their designs, and to charge atheism on those who will not submit.

Locke.

We have been entitled, and have had our names prefixed at length to whole volumes of mean productions.

Swift.

4. To give a claim to any thing.

But we, descended from your sacred line,
Entitled to your heav'n and rites divine,
Are banish'd earth.

Dryden, Virg.

God discovers the martyr and confessor without the trial of flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle many to the reward of actions which they had never the opportunity of performing.

Addison, Spect.

He entitled himself to the continuance of the divine protection and goodness, by humiliation and prayer.

Atterbury.

Hardly even is the penitent sinner saved; thus difficult is that duty, by which alone he can be reconciled to his Creator, and entitled to the mercies of the gospel.

Rogers.

5. To grant any thing as claimed by a title.

This is to entitle God's care how and to what we please.

Locke.

ENTITY.† n. s. [entitas, low Lat.]

1. Something which really is; a real being.

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, he must answer who asked it; who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unbeing; who hath in his intellect the ideal existencies of things, and entities before their extances.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

Dear hope! earth's dowry and heaven's debt,
The entity of things that are not yet:
Subt'lest; but surest being.

Crashaw.

Fortune is no real entity, nor physical essence, but a mere relative signification.

Bentley.

Where entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies, fly.

Hudibras.

2. A particular species of being.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give an entity of sound, which we call crackling, puffing, and spitting; as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into the fire.

Bacon.

God's decrees of salvation and damnation, both Romish and Reformed, affix to men's particular entity, absolutely considered, without any respect to demeanour.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

To ENTO'IL. v. a. [from toil.] To ensnare; to entangle; to bring into toils or nets.

He cut off their land forces from their ships, and entailed both their navy and their camp with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

To ENTO'MB.† v. a. [old Fr. entomber.] To put into a tomb; to bury.

Processions were first begun for the interring of holy martyrs, and the visiting of those places where they were entombed.

Hooker.

The cry went one for thee, and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive;
And ease thy reputation in a tent.

Shakespeare.

I think I could, with far less pain and reluctance, suffer my body to be buried alive in the cold earth, than so stark and stupid a conceit to entomb my soul.

More, Notes on Psychathanasia.

They, within the beast's vast womb,
The choice and flower of all their troops entomb.

Denham.

ENTO'MBMENT.* n. s. [from entomb.] Burial; the state of being shut up in a tomb.

The strictest imprisonment is far more tolerable than being shut up by a lazy humour from profitable employment; this enchaineth a man hand and foot; this is beyond any imprisonment; it is the very entombment of a man, quite sequestering him from the world, and debarring him from any valuable concerns therein.

Barrow, Serms. vol. iii. S. 19.

ENTOMO'LOGY.* n. s. [Fr. entomologie; from the Gr. έντομον, an insect, and λόγος, discourse.] That part of natural history, which treats of insects. The French word, as well as our own, is of recent adoption.

Nothing would recommend entomology more than some neat plates, that should well express the generic distinctions of insects, according to Linnæus.

White, Hist. of Selborne, p. 91.

ENTORTILATION.* n. s. [Fr. entortillement, from the Lat. tortilis.] A turning into a circle or round figure.

Willing that those which should work in the borders [of the table,] raisings, flowries, and wrappings, entortilations, and such like, should amuse themselves only for beautifying and decoration; and what was to be plain should answer to the measure and dimension; and that in all these things they should be exquisitely careful.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. (1633,) p. 47.

To ENTRA'IL. v. a. [intralciare, Italian.] To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare

With nature, did an arbor green dispreed,

Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,

Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,

His pricking arms entail'd with roses red. Spenser, F. Q.

A little wicker basket,

Made of fine twigs entailed curiously,

In which they gather'd flowers.

Spenser, Prothal.

EN'TRAILS. n. s. without a singular. [entrailles, Fr. εστερα, Gr.]

1. The intestines; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear can fall.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The entrails are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I fear that harden'd heart from out her breast,

Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast.

Dryden.

2. The internal parts.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
And shews the fagg'd entrails of this pit.

Shakespeare.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America.

Locke.

The earth hath lost

Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now

Wounded no less for marble than for gold.

B. Jonson.

ENTRA'MIELLED.* adj. [from trammel.] Curled; frizzled; entrammelled; as, outdrawn locks of hair.

Shewwood, and Cotgrave, in V. Passefilé.

EN'TRANCE. n. s. [entrant, Fr.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too.

South.

2. The act of entering.

The reason, that I gather, he is mad,

Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,

Of his own door being shut against his entrance.

Shakespeare.

Better far, I guess,

That we do make our entrance several ways.

Shakespeare.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players;

They have their exits and their entrances.

Shakespeare.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea.

Judith, iv. 7.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the master.

Wotton, Architecture.

Many are the ways that lead,

To his grim cave all dismal! yet to sense

More terrible at the entrance than within.

Milton, P. L.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,

At the entrance of my threshold be forgot.

Dryden, Juv.

4. Initiation; commencement.

ENT

This is that which, at first entrance, baulks and cools them : they want their liberty. Locke.

5. Intellectual ingress; knowledge.

He that travelleth a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel.

Bacon, Essays.

6. The act of taking possession of an office or dignity.

From the first entrance of this king to his reign, never was king either more loving, or better beloved.

Hayward, Edw. VI.

7. The beginning of any thing.

St. Augustine, in the entrance of one of his sermons, makes a kind of apology. Hakewill on Prov.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse. Clarendon.

TO ENTRANCE. v. a. [from trance; transc. French, from transco, Latin, to pass over, to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

2. To put into an extasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforced to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton, P. L.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpower'd with ecstasy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

TO ENTRAP. v. a. [old Fr. entraper.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapp'd are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get. Spenser, F. Q.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapt the noble minded Talbot. Shakespeare.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap
The man most wary, in her whelming lap. Spenser, F. Q.
He sought to entrap me by intelligence, Shakespeare.

3. To take advantage of.

An injurious person lies in wait to entrap thee in thy words. Eccles. viii. 11.

TO ENTREASURE.* See TO INTREASURE.

TO ENTREAT. v. a. [traeter, French.]

1. To petition; to solicit; to importune.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife. Gen. xxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakespeare.
The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. Gen. xxv. 21.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Eccles. vii. 20.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?

Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:
I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
— God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakespeare.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

VOL. II.

ENT

The garden of Proserpino this night,
And in the midst thereof a silver seat,
With a thick arbour goodly overdight,
In which she often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat. Spenser, F. Q.

TO ENTREAT. v. n.

1. To offer a treaty or compact. Not used.

Alexander was the first that entreated of true peace with them. 1 Mac. x. 47.

2. To treat; to discourse. Not used.

The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touched with the loadstone, toward the North pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat. Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakespeare.

The Janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men. Knolles.

ENTREAT.* n. s. [from the verb.] Entreaty. Not now in use.

This is he,
For whom I thwarted Soliman's entreats,
And for whose exile I lamented thus.

Trag. of Solim. and Perseda, (1599.)

ENTREATABLE.* adj. [from entreat.] That may be entreated, or is soon entreated. Huloet.

ENTREATANCE. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation. Not used.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTREATER.* n. s. [from entreat.] One who makes a petition.

Yet are they no advocates of ours, but petitioners and entreaters for us. Fulke on the Rhemish Test. (1617,) p. 825.

ENTREATIVE.* adj. [from entreat.] Treating; pleading.

Oft have I season'd savoury periods
With sugar'd words; —
And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase
With smelling flowers of vernant rhetoric.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657,) i. 1.

ENTREATY. v. n. [from entreat.]

1. Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Reception; entertainment. Obsolete.

If those cunning palates hither come,
They shall find guests' entreaty and good room.

B. Jonson, Epicene.

ENTREMETS. v. n. [French, Dr. Johnson says.

He should have added that the French word was anciently used for delicacies or choice dishes served in between the courses of a feast. In this sense, the father of English poetry uses it. "With wine at feasts — and tables full of entremets." Chaucer, Rom. R. 6831.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true charard in potages and entremets. Mortimer, Husbandry.

ENTREPO'T.* n. s. [French.] A magazine; a warehouse. Common in military language.

[They] employed a multitude of shipping, and settled many rich and flourishing colonies, as well as many entrepots and out distant factories. Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 68.

To ENTRI'CK.* v. a. [old Fr. intriquer. This is a forgotten but proper word, and a good substitute for the verb intricate, against which Dr. Johnson objects. See To INTRICATE.] To deceive; to perplex; to entangle.

That mirror hath me now entricked.

Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1642.

You that love most entrickith.

Chaucer, Assemb. of Fowls, 403.

E'NTRY.† n. s. [from enter; entry, French of the eleventh century; entrée, later French; from the Latin, intrare. Our word has also passed through the forms of entree and entresse; the former being used by Chaucer, the latter noticed by Coles.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon.

A strait long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head. Dryden.

Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend

The curious eyes of thy invited friend? Dryden, Juv.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Tatler.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollient; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The act of taking possession of any estate.

4. The act of registering or setting down in writing.

A notary made an entry of this act. Bacon, New Atlantis.

5. The act of entering publicly into any city.

The day being come, he made his entry: he was a man of middle stature and age, and comely. Bacon.

To ENTU'NE.* v. a. [old Fr. entuner, "to tune, to sing, to chant, &c." Cotgrave. This is also a forgotten but useful word.] To tune; to chant.

Ful wel she sange the service divine Entuned in hir nose ful swetly. Chaucer, Prol. C. T.

They sung hymns and sonnets — entuned in a solemn and mournful note. Hakewill on Providence, p. 429.

To ENTWI'NE.* See To INTWINE. Milton, however, writes it entwine.

To ENTWI'ST.* v. a. [from twist.] To wreath round or together.

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

To ENU'BILATE. v. a. [e and mobile, Latin.] To clear from clouds. Dict.

To ENU'CLEATE. v. a. [enucleo, Latin.] To solve; to clear; to disentangle. Dict.

To ENVA'SSAL.* v. a. [from vassal.] To make over to another as his slave. A serviceable but hitherto unnoticed word.

[They] subject and envassal themselves unto a base and new upstart servant of their's. Transl. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 93.

But well I wote thou art not envassal me. More, Song of the Soul, li. i. i. 23.

[He] doth not fondly hug this and that particular created good thing, and envassal himself unto it. Cudworth, Serm. p. 65.

ENUCLEATION,* n. s. [Fr. enucleation.] Explanation; plain manifestation. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To ENVEIGLE.* See To INVEIGLE.

To ENVELOPE.† v. a. [enveloper, French. Our word was at first envelope, and is so used by Chaucer in the first definition of the meanings, that is, to wrap up.]

1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.

He is most enveloped in sin. Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'est spirits of the night envelope you, good provost. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

A cloud of smoke envelopes either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:

Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers jousting, men with men. Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.

Nocturnal shades

This world envelope, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts. Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkened with filthy dust. Spenser, F. Q.

ENVELOPE.† n. s. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

A letter from the king of Spain was given to his daughter by the Spanish ambassador, and she tore the envelope, and let it fall. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1671.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

ENVELOPEMENT.* n. s. [old Fr. envelopement.] Perplexity; entanglement.

They have found so many contrary senses in the same text, that it is become difficult to see any sense at all, through their envelopements. Search's Freewill, &c. (1763,) Pref.

To ENVE'NOM.† v. a. [from venom, old Fr. envenimer, to poison. And so Chaucer: "Age that all will envenime."]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakespeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt the envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines. Milton, P. L.

One of that order, which envenoms even poison itself, and makes the Roman religion much more malignant and turbulent than otherwise it would be.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. Dedic.

He would very frequently let fly an envenomed arrow.

Tatler, No. 260.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shakespeare, As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age. Dryden.

To ENVE'RMEIL.* v. a. [Fr. vermeil. Chaucer uses envermailed.] To dye red.

That lovely dye

That did thy cheek envermeil. Milton, Ode on the Death of a Fair Infant.

E'NVIALE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

ENV

ENVIER. n. s. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon, Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced. Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. † adj. [old fr. envieux.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov. xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spite. Swift.

TO ENVIRON. † v. a. [environner, French, Dr. Johnson says. It should be added that the original is Greek, ἐν, in, and γύρος, a circle, whence the Latin gyrus; and thus the French used the adverb environ for about; in which way Chaucer also employs it. "About the king ystondin environ Attendance, Diligence, &c." Court of Love, ver. 1031. He uses also the verb environ to surround. Barret calls environ "a French word made of the Latin, quasi in gyro." Alv. 1580. And Cotgrave gives us the old French verb engyronner, the same, he says, as environner.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.
The Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land shall hear of it, and shall environ us round. Joshua, vii. 9.
I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Tit. Andron.
The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains. Kneller, Hist.
The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.
Within the environing rocks stood the city. Sandys.
Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton, P. R.
God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Since she must go, and I must mourn, come, night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

ENU

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege, to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears. Shakespeare.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakespeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me. Milton, Sonnet.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleveland.

ENVIRONS. † n. s. [environs, French, Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable; some choose, in modern times, affectedly to adopt the French pronunciation. This word is somewhere used by Evelyn.] The neighbourhood or neighbouring places round about the country.

When you go to Genoa, pray observe carefully all the environs of it. Ld. Chesterfield.

Hitherto Mr. Shenstone had no conception of an whole, or of disposing his environs on any consistent plan, and giving it its present beautiful and picturesque appearance. Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 51.

TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Latin.] To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wake, Prep. for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. s. [enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whosoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Sprat, Serm.

The chymists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts, Logick.

ENUMERATIVE.  adj.* [from enumerate.] Rockoning up singly; counting over.

Being particular and enumerative of the variety of evils which have disordered his life. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii. § 5.

TO ENUNCIATE. † v. a. [enuncio, Latin.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express. This word is given by Dr. Johnson without authority or example; but it is in the Old Vocabulary of Cockram, and I have also found it in a very valuable writer of the seventeenth century. I have noticed this, because some have thought the word quite modern.

I know that there is such a man as Plato, though in the mean time I cannot tell what he is, nor what are all the truths that may be enuniated concerning him. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 553.

ENUNCIATION. † n. s. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Bp. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enun, and actions of the intellect and will. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Expression, in writing.

A few changes have been made in the enunciations of this book, chiefly in those of the subsidiary propositions which Euclid introduced for the sake of the rest; they are expressed here in the manner that seemed best adapted to the new notation. Playfair, Elements of Geometry, Pref.

ENV

4. Manner of utterance.

Without a graceful and pleasing enunciation all your elegance of style in speaking is not worth one farthing. Ld. Chesterfield.

ENUNCIATIVE. † adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.

Esdra, Nehemiah, Ezechial, and Daniel, although they were prophets; yet be their works compact in form of narrations, which by orators be called enunciative, and only pertaineth to histories; wherein is expressed a thing done, and persons named.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 205.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof.

Ayliffe.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.

ENVOY. † n. s. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire

With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbutnot on Cons.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

A gentleman, who was envoy from some German prince, whose dead father had been a companion to the knights of the most noble order of the garter, made an address to his majesty, with a letter and return of the George and Garter.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. p. 29.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,

At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;

Still travel to and fro' the nervous way,

And their impressions to the brain convey;

Where their report the vital envoys make,

And with new orders are commanded back. Blackmore.

4. Formerly, a kind of postscript, sent with poetical compositions, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, noticing the concluding stanzas of Chaucer's poems, to which the title of l'envoy is prefixed. But the term was not confined to poetical compositions. It was employed to enforce or recommend what had been previously written, whether in prose or rhyme. Not now in use.

Tragical tales, [in prose,] translated by Turbenville in time of his troubles out of sundrie Italians, with the argument and l'envoy to each tale. Lond. 1587.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 475.

ENVOYSHIP. * n. s. [from envoy.] The office of an envoy.

Cain paid all due reverence to this lunar envoyship.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

To ENURE. * See To INURE. Our old writers, however, usually write this word enure; but Dr. Johnson is well supported by authorities for inure.

To ENVY. † v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin, from nimis video, to look too much upon what belongs to others. The old French envier (au jeu) is to vie; in which sense Chaucer and Spenser employ our word. But it is no longer so used. The word was also formerly accented on the last syllable, as might be shewn from the poetry of Spenser and B. Jonson. But now one will now imitate it.]

1. To hate another's excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways.

Prov. iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier of Envy.

ENW

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,

When I have envied thy behaviour.

Shakspeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To ENVY. † v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity: with at, Dr. Johnson says; but not exclusively so, as the examples which he gives might seem to argue; since they all have at. I therefore give the following without it.

And Moses said, enviest thou for my sake. Numbers, xi. 29.

In seeking tales and informations

Against this man, whose honesty the devil

And his disciples only envy at,

Ye blew the fire that burns ye.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Bp. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

ENVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,

Is emulation in the learn'd or brave.

Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Caesar.

Shakspeare.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffer'd death merely in envy to their virtues and superiour genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden on Dram. Poetry.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;

You turn the good we offer into envy.

Shakspeare.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

ENVYING. * n. s. [from envy.] Ill will; malice.

Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like.

Galat. v. 21.

ENWALLOWED. * part. adj. [en and wallow.] Wallowing.

Enwallow'd in his owne black bloody gore.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 14.

To ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakspeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n;

Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand

Enwheel thee round.

Shakspeare, Othello.

To ENWIDEN. * v. a. [en and widen.] To make larger.

Cockeram.

To ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,

This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'm your mother;

And put you in the catalogue of those

That were enwomb'd mine.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

E P A

Or as the Africk Niger stream enwombs itself into the earth, and after comes, Having first made a natural bridge to pass For many leagues, far greater than it was; May't not be said, that her grave shall restore Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne, Poems, p. 218.

ENWRA'P.* v. a. See To INWRAP. Dr. Johnson there admits the spelling of enwrap by Shakespeare and Milton; and other good writers are in favour also of the same. To involve.

For another man to yield such unlawful aid, is no better than a foul affront of publick justice, and enwraps the agent in a partnership of crime. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Neither can it [the sun] ever see more than half the world at once; darkness the while enwraps the other.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 38.

In thy fear, my God, is hope, and love, and confidence, and peace, and every limb and ingredient of happiness enwrapped.

Donne, Devot. p. 145.

ENWRA'PMENT.* n. s. [from enwrap.] A covering; a wrapper.

The whole paragraph should be thus translated: they wreathed together a foliature of the fig-tree, and made themselves enwrappings, i. e. they wrapped themselves up in them.

Shuckford on the Creation, p. 203.

EO'LIAN.* } adj. [from Æolia.] Denoting one of EO'LIK. } the five dialects of the Greek tongue.

It denotes also a particular kind of verse; and in musick, one of the modes of the ancients, which is said to have possessed particular sweetness mixed with gravity.

Various-measur'd verse,
Æolian charms, and Dorian lyric odes. Milton, P. R.

Mark in this strain the power of the Ionian; in that you see the effect of the Æolian. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

EO'LIAN Harp.* An instrument, so called from Æolus, the heathen deity of winds; as it produces its wild and often exquisite strains merely by the action of the wind. Thomson has admirably described the effect of the instrument, and the manner by which it is acted upon.

A certain musick, never known before,
Here hush'd the pensive melancholy mind;
Full easily obtain'd: behoves no more
But sidelong to the gently-waving wind
To lay the well-tun'd instrument reclin'd,
From which with airy-flying fingers light,
Beyond each mortal touch the most refin'd,
The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight,
Whence with just cause the harp of Æolus it hight.

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 40.

EO'LIPILE.† n. s. [colipyle, old Fr. from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an colipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet, Theory on the Earth.

EPACT.† n. s. [epacte, old Fr. from the Gr. ἐπακτός, of ἐπάρω, to bring on.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;

Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holler on Time.

EPENETICK.* adj. [Gr. ἐπαινητικός.] Laudatory; panegyric.

In whatever kind of poetry, whether the epick, the dramatick, — the epenetick, the bucolick, or the epigram.

Phillips, Theatr. Poet. Præf.

EP'AULEMENT. n. s. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.]

In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a casemate. Harris.

ESPAULE'T.* n. s. [Fr. epaulette; which formerly signified "the wing of a gown, doublet, &c." Cotgrave in V. ESPAULETTE.] An ornament for the shoulder; a shoulder-knot: chiefly now a military word.

Their old vanity was dazzled and seduced by military liveries, cockades, and epaulets. Burke.

EPEN'THESIS. n. s. [ἐπεπένθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

EP'HA. n. s. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel, xlv. 11.

EPHE'MERA. n. s. [ἐφήμερον.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.
2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL.† } n. s. [ἐφημέριος] Diurnal; begin-
EPHE'MERICK. } ning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a meer bubble or blast; and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

He was far from the conceit of a deambulatory, hebdomatical, or peradventure ephemeral, office.

Bp. Morton, Episc. Asserl. p. 142.

EPHEME'RIDES.* n. s. [from ephemeris, being in fact the plural of it; though formerly ephemerides was used as a noun of the singular number.] Astronomical tables, shewing the present state of the heavens for every day at noon. Our old lexicography defines ephemerides "a book of astronomy."

Let him make an ephemerides, read Suisset the calculator's works, Scaliger de emendatione temporum, and Petavius his adversary, till he understand them.

Bp. n. Anal. of Mel. p. 281.

EPHE'MERIS. n. s. [ἐφημερίς.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.
2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miss.

Dryden, Nun's Tale.

EPHEMERIST. n. s. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and slighting the art of foolish astrologers, and genethiacal ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of natiivities.

Howell.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. s. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.]

A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammordam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same.

Derham.

EPHEMEROUS.* adj. [ἐφήμερος.] Beginning and ending in a day. An old word revived by Burke.

"An ephemeros monster" occurs in Annotations on Glauville, &c. in 1682. p. 12.

The ephemeros tale that does its business, and dies in a day.

Burke, on the Fr. Revol.

EPHESIAN.* n. s. [from Ephesus.]

1. One of those in Ephesus, and adjacent countries, to whom St. Paul addressed an epistle.

An epistle to the Ephesians was, in effect, an epistle to the other churches of Asia at the same time.

Rp. Percy, Key to the New Test.

2. In the time of Shakspeare, a vulgar appellation, or familiar phrase, for which the commentators have not been able to assign any reason. It may probably have been derived, in old time, like Corinthian, from the dissolute manners of the Ephesians, especially from their gross language; and so have passed into modern tongues. See CORINTHIAN.

Art thou there? it is thine host, thine

Ephesian, calls. Shakspeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

EPHIALTES.* n. s. [old Fr. ephiâlte; Gr. ἐφιάλης, from ἐπι, upon, and ἀλλομαι, to leap.] The disease usually called the night-mare. The word is in our old lexicography. See NIGHT-MARE.

The ephiâltes, or night-mare, is called by the common people witch-riding.

Brand, Popular Antiq.

EPHOD. n. s. [עֹפֹד] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen.

Calmct.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few

As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers.

Saunders.

EPICEDE.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιχθιδος, ἐπι, upon, and χθιδος, funeral solemnity; Fr. epicede. Dr. Johnson notices the Latin form of epicedium, but has overpassed epicede, which was in-use, in our language, long before epicedium. Our old lexicography also has epicede.] A funeral discourse or song.

We are yet in hope of somewhat to come forward, to the inistymable glory of the land, namely, his worthy works de Antiquitate Britannica, et de illustribus viris, with hys epigrams and epicedes. Bale, Dedic. of Leland's Itin. (1549.)

Epicedes and obsequies upon the deaths of sundry personages. Donne, Poems, p. 240.

EPICEDIAN.* adj. [from epicede.] Elegiack; mournful.

[The] epicedian song, [is] a song sung ere the corps be buried.

Cockeram.

EPICEDIUM. n. s. [ἐπιχθιδος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day

One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;

These, your own anthems, shall become

Your lasting epicedium.

Saunders Paraphrase of Psalms.

EPICENE.* adj. [epicene, Fr. epicenus, Lat. from the Gr. κοινός, common.] Common; of both kinds: the term, in grammar, of one of the Latin genders.

Of the epicene gender, bees, and shees,

Amphibion Archy is the chief. B. Jonson, Masques.

All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all inamoratoes, or persons of the epicene gender, who gaze at one another in the presence of ladies.

Tatler, No. 27.

EPICK. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἑρκος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epick song,

While musick numbers, or while verse has feet.

Dryden.

The epick poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions.

Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epick.

Broome, View of Epick Poesy.

EPICK.* n. s. An epick poem.

He [Mr. M'Pherson] brought forward his counterfeit epicks, [the alleged poems of Ossian,] whose manifold defects and deformities were not so much pardoned for the beauties, thinly scattered, which they contained, as from the persuasion that they were the works of an ancient artist.

Campbell on the Eccl. and Lit. Hist. of Ireland, p. 170.

EPICURE. n. s. [epicureus, Lat.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge.

Locke.

EPICUREAN.* n. s. [from Epicurus.] One of the sect of Epicurus.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoicks encountered him.

Acts, xvii. 18.

EPICUREAN.* adj.

1. Pertaining to the sect of Epicurus.

Academicks old and new, with those

Surnam'd Peripateticks, and the sect

Epicurean.

Milton, P. R.

2. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,

Keep his brain fanning; epicurean cooks,

Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this!

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

How would our Democritus have been affected,—to see a withered face, a disensed, deformed, cankered complexion, a rotten carcass, a viperous mind, and epicurean soul set out with orient pearls, jewels, diadems, perfumes, curious elaborate works, as proud of his clothes, as a child of his new coat.

Burton, Anal. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 34.

E'PICURISM.† n. s. [from epicure.]

1. Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

The darts of devoutness, epicurism, and unmercifulness.

Bp. of Chichester, Two Serms. (1576), sign. B. viii.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust,

Make it a tavern or a brothel.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism.

Calamy, Serm.

2. The doctrine of Epicurus. The learned Waterland, to distinguish this more pointedly, writes the word epicureism; and the accent on epicurism, in this sense, should be on the third syllable. This usage of the word is modern. Dr. Johnson takes no notice whatever of it.

Infidelity, or modern Deism, is little else but revived Epicurism, Sadducism, and Zendicism.

Waterland, Charge, (1732), p. 75.

The first book of the Enquiry ends with a sentence far remote from irreligion and Epicurism.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

To E'PICURIZE.† v. n. [from Epicurus.]

1. To devour like an epicure. A word not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the feeble authority of Flatman. But better writers use it; and a forcible word it is.

He thriftily improves the objects of his cruelty, spending them by degrees, and epicurizing on their pain.

Fuller, Holy State, (1648), p. 446.

These evil demons did, as it were, delicate and epicurize in them.

Hallywell's Melampyr, p. 101.

2. To profess the doctrine of Epicurus.

The tree of knowledge mistaken for the tree of life—Epicurizing philosophy, Antinomian liberty, under the pretence of free grace and a gospel spirit.

Cudworth, Serm. p. 87.

While I could see thee full of eager pain

My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine.

Flatman.

EPICY'CLE. n. s. [ἐὼ and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre.

Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal.

Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribbli'd o'er;

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton, P. L.

EPICY'CLOID. n. s. [ἐπικυκλωειδής.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle.

Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL.† } adj. [ἐπί and δῆμος, Gr. epide-
EPIDE'MICK. } mique, Fr.]

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemick disease, put to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

As the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shews the ordinary temper of the place.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions.

South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemick among persons of honour.

Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Cleaveland. It is however used by a better writer.

That great epidemical council, wherein every one from the peer to the plebeian hath an inclusive vote.

Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. (1642), p. 219.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all;

Scotland's a nation epidemical.

Cleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. s. [ἐπιδερμῖς.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

EPIGA'STRICK.* adj. [Fr. epigastrique, from the Gr. ἐπί and γαστήρ, the belly.] The epigastrick region is a name given to the upper part of the abdomen:—there are also two epigastrick veins, and as many arteries.

Chambers's.

EPIGE'UM.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπί, upon, and γῆ, the earth.] That part of the orbit in which any planet comes nearest to the earth. See APOGEUM.

EPIGLOTTIS.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιγλωττῖς, from ἐπί, upon, and γλῶττις, the tongue.] The thin movable cartilage, in form of a little tongue, which covers the aperture of the windpipe.

Ash.

EPIGRAM.† n. s. [epigramma, Latin.] The word originally means inscription, from ἐπί, upon, and γράφω, to write. So, in our old lexicography, "epigram or superscription," Huloet. Cotgrave, nearly a century afterwards, retained, in his translation of the French epigramme, this classical meaning; calling it "a short poem, wittily taxing a particular person or fault; also a title, inscription, or superscription." A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witerackers cannot flout me out of my humour: do'st thou think I care for a satire or an epigram?

Shakespeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands?

Peacock of Poetry.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit.

Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Lat.]
EPIGRAMMA'TICK. }

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names.

Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition.

Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso.

Addison.

EPIGRA'MMATIST.† n. s. [Fr. epigrammatiste, Cotgrave.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets, withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest streets twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish.

Peacock.

The epigrammatist [Martial] speaks the sense of their drunken principles.

Dr. Taylor, Holy Dying, li. § 1.

EPI

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

EPIGRAPH.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιγραφή, Fr. epigraphe. Dr. Johnson gives the Greek unaltered in epigraphe, a word of four syllables, as he places the accent on the second. But I take epigraph to be an old English word, merely with the superfluous final e, as was formerly common, and intended, like paragraph or autograph, to be pronounced in three syllables.] A title; an inscription. Bullockar.

EPIGRAPHER n. s. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. Dict.

EPILEPSY. n. s. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:
This is the second fit.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from choleric spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Floyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICAL.* adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; disordered as by an epilepsy.

In the previous use of some extatical solemnities, he became frantick and epileptical.

Spencer on Vulg. Proph. (1665.) p. 36.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any strains, even such as are very fragrant. Arbutnot on Diet.

EPILOGISM.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιλογισμός.] Computation; enumeration.

Some reckon the epilogism from Cyrus; some from the seventh, others from the twentieth of Artaxerxes Longimanus; accordingly ending the weeks, some at the profanation of the temple by Antiochus, &c.

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650.) p. 156.

The Greek and Hebrew making a difference of two thousand years — this epilogism must be detracted from the Hebrew, or superadded to the Greek. Ibid. p. 171.

EPILOGISTICK.* adj. [from epilogue.] Having the nature of an epilogue.

These lines are an epilogistick palinode to the last elegy.

Warton on Milton's Smaller Poems.

To EPILOGISE. See To EPILOGUIZE.

EPILOGUE. † n. s. [epilogus, Latin; epilogue, French; ἐπιλόγιον, Gr.] The word in our language, originally signified the conclusion of a discourse. "The conclusion or epylloge." Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, 1543, fol. 95. b.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden, Tyrant. Love.

To EPILOGUIZE. v. n. [old Fr. epiloguer; Lat. epilogo. Some have pretended that Milton coined this word; but it is in our old lexicography.]

1. To make conclusion or end. [See the etym. of epilogue.] Cockeram.

2. To speak an epilogue.

EPI

The dances ended, the spirit epiloguises.

Stage-Direction in Milton's Comus.

To EPILOGUIZE. v. a. To add to, in the manner of an epilogue.

I was rude enough to interrupt the laugh of applause, with which the charming companion of my new acquaintance was epiloguizing his witty raillery. Student, (1750.) i. 143.

EPINICION.* n. s. [Greek, ἐπινίκιον, from ἐπὶ, upon, and νίκη, victory.] A song of triumph.

They distinguish between the trisagion and epinicion, or triumphal hymn. Christian Antiq. ii. 118.

I certainly did not mean, that the Saxon minstrels had ever sung a triumphal epinicion on Hengist's massacre.

T. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 69.

EPINYCTIS. n. s. [ἐπινυκτίς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wiceman, Surg.

EPIPHANY. † n. s. [ἐπιφάνεια, Gr. manifestation.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

And through thy poor birth, where first thou
Glorified'st poverty,

And yet soon after riches didst allow,
By accepting kings' gifts in the Epiphany.

Deliver, and make us to both ways free. Donne, Poems, p. 343.

From Christmas to Epiphany, the church's design, in all her proper services, is to set forth the humanity of our Saviour, and to manifest him in the flesh; but from the Epiphany to Septuagesima Sunday, especially in the four following Sundays, she endeavours to manifest his divinity, by recounting to us in the Gospels some of his first miracles and manifestations of his deity.

Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer.

EPIPHONEMA. n. s. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the aisles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound.

Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. s. [ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLORRHINOUS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, φύλλον, and σπίγμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. s. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiceman.

EPIPOCE. n. s. [ἐπιποχή.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Erelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Asyl.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPISCOPALIANS.* n. s. plur. [Lat. episcopalis.]

1. In England, those who adhere to the established church of England.

2. In Scotland, persons who dissent from the established church of Scotland.

EPISCOPALLY.* adv. [from episcopal.] In an episcopal manner; by episcopal authority.

The necessity of the sacrament, and the invalidity of ecclesiastical functions when performed by persons who were not episcopally ordained, were entertained by many with great applause. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times.

EPISCOPATE.† n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

These great qualities at length conducted you so deservedly to the episcopate.

Arnold to Abp. Herring, (1744.) Dedic. of Wisdom.

EPISCOPY.* n. s. [Lat. episcopius, Gr. ἐπισκοπία, exploring, looking about.] Survey; search.

If the censor, in his moral episcopacy, being to judge most in matters not answerable by writ or action, could not use an instrument so gross and bodily as jurisdiction is, how can the minister of the gospel manage the corpulent and secular trial of bill and process in things merely spiritual?

Milton, Reason of Ch. Govern.

EPISODE. n. s. [ἐπίσωδη.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison, Spect.

EPISODICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Contained in an EPISODICK. } episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. s. [ἐπί and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbutnot.

EPISTLE.† n. s. [Sax. epystol; old French, epistle; Gr. ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPISTOLARY.† adj. [from epistle.] This adjective was at first epistolar. "This epistolar way will have a considerable efficacy upon them." More on the Seven Churches, 1669. p. 7. Again, "this epistolar way is still retained," p. 8. But epistolary was in use in 1681.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

Scarce allowing the author one epistolary compliment.

Mannyngham's Disc. (1681.) p. 63.

The first of our countrymen, however, who published a set of his own letters, though not in English, was Roger Ascham, who flourished about the time of the Reformation; and, when that mode of writing had been cultivated by the best scholars in various parts of Europe, was celebrated for the terseness of his epistolary style. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 54.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPISTOLICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐπιστολικός, Lat. epistolicus.]

Having the form and manner of an epistle.

I have an epistolical dissertation on John Malela (for so he should be called, not Malela) in Dr. Mill's hands.

Bentley's Letters, p. 154.

EPISTLER.† n. s. [from epistle; old Fr. epistolier, in both senses which follow; of which, however, Dr. Johnson has noticed only the first, and that in a contemptuous manner, without a single example.]

1. A writer of letters.

But what needs the man to be so furiously angry with the good old epistler, for saying, that the Apostle's charge (Let every one have his own wife) is general to all.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 272.

The young epistler is your's to the antipodes, or at least to the centre of the earth!

Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 37.

2. He who regularly assisted at the communion table in the service of our church, and read the epistle, obtained this name.

The principal minister using a decent cope, and being assisted with the gospeller and epistler. Const. and Can. Eccl. 24.

TO EPISTOLIZE.* v. n. [from epistle.] To write letters.

There are some, who in lieu of letters, write hemilies; they preach when they should epistolize. Howell, Lett. i. i. 1.

Whence this proceeds I know not, unless it be from a charming kind of virtue that your letters carry with them to work upon my spirits, which are so full of facetie and familiar friendly strains, and so punctual in answering every part of mine, that you may give the law of epistolizing to all mankind.

Howell, Lett. iv. 27.

EPISTROPHE.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιστροφή.] In rhetorick, a figure which concludes each member of a sentence with the same affirmation.

Since concord was lost, friendship was lost, fidelity was lost, liberty was lost, all was lost. Chambers.

EPISTYLE.* n. s. [Fr. epistyle, Gr. ἐπιστύλιον.] An architrave; a term of architecture.

EPI'TASIS.* n. s. [from the Gr. ἐπιτίνα, to heighten.] In the ancient drama, the progress of the plot.

Let us mind what you come for, the play, which will draw on the epitasis now. B. Jonson, Magnetic Lady.

I am sick of the sentiments, of the diction, of the protasis, of the epitasis, and the catastrophe!

Pope, Narrative of Dennis's Frenzy.

EPI'TAPH.† n. s. [old Fr. epitaphe, Gr. ἐπιτάφιος, from ἐπὶ, upon, and τάφος, a tomb, q. d. discourse engraven on the tomb.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakespeare.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength, that only yields to thine. Smith.

EPITAPHIAN.* adj. [Gr. ἐπιτάφιος.] Pertaining to an epitaph.

Like that doughty centurion Afranius in Lucian; who to imitate the noble Pericles in his epitaphian speech, stepping up after the battle to bewail the slain Severianus falls into a pitiful condolement to think of those costly suppers and drinking banquets, which he must now taste of no more.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

EPITHALAM'NIUM.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπιθαλάμιον, from θάλαμος, a bed; Fr. epithalame; and Ben Jonson writes our word epithalamion, as well as epithalamium, which he defines "a poem used to be sung when the bride was led into her chamber." Masques at Court.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse.

Sandys, Paraphrase of the Psalms.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPITHALAMY.* n. s. [We have the word thus anglicised nearly two centuries since. It is written epithalmy in Cockeram's old vocabulary.] A nuptial song.

He shew'd us how for sins we ought to sigh,
And how to sing Christ's epithalamy.

Chudleigh on Donne's Death, in Donne's Poems, ed. 1650.

EPITHEM. n. s. [ἐπιθήμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wiseman, Surgery.

EPITHET.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπίθετον, Fr. epithete. In the old tragedy of Soliman and Perseda, (1599,) our word is epitheton, "a feminine epitheton; which Shakspeare also uses, perhaps by way of ridicule, in Love's Lab. Lost, "a congruent epitheton."] Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 203.

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head. It is the just epithete of the world, which Julius Scaliger gives unjustly to London, "torva peregrinis."

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous and villainous to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression. For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me? — Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakspeare.

To EPITHET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entitle; to describe the quality of.

Never was a town better epithetized. Wotton, Rem. p. 566.

EPITOME.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπιτομή, old Fr. epitome.] Abridgement; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's, Which, by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

To be honest in a right line, and virtuous by epitome, be firm unto such principles of goodness, as carry in them volumes of instruction and may abridge thy labour.

Brown, Chr. Morals, p. 81.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

To EPITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrors and such spies.
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne, Poems, p. 10.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomised, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison, Spect.

EPITOMISER.† n. s. [from epitomise.] An abridger; EPITOMIST. } an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

When that epitomiser of Trogas had to the full described and set out king Ptolemy's riot, as a chief engine and instrument of his overthrow, he adds siddling and dancing.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 496.

Both this Brennus, and another famous captain Britomarus, whom the epitomis Florus and others mention.

Milton, Hist. of Eng.

Dion Cassius, or his epitomizer Xiphiline, will help you out.

Hales, Rom. p. 272.

EPOCH.† n. s. [ἐποχή, Gr. from ἐπείχειν, to stop, according to Scaliger. Dryden writes our word epoché, according to its Greek original; though Dr. Johnson, in the example, has given it epocha.] The time at which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochs, or terms of time. Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falsehood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles:
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochs mistakes. Dryden, Astræa Redux.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochs of woe. Prior.

EPODE.† n. s. [ἑπώδη, Gr. epode, Fr.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

Strophe, antistrophe, or epode, — were a kind of stanzas framed only for the music. Milton, Pref. to Samson Agonistes.

EPOPEE.† n. s. [ἑποποιία, Gr. from ἔπος, discourse, and ποιέω, to make; epopée, Fr.] An epic or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopée, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden, Virgil.

That kind of satire, which is conveyed in the form of the epopée: a pleasing vehicle of satire, seldom, if ever, used by the ancients; for we know so little of the Margites of Homer, that it cannot be produced as an example.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

EPULARY.* adj. [Lat. epularis.] Belonging to feasts or banquets. Scott.

EPULATION. n. s. [epulatio, Lat.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EPULOTICK. n. s. [ἐπουλωτικόν.] A cicatrizing medicament.

The ulcer, incarnated with common sarcotics, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wiseman on Inflammation.

EQUABILITY.† n. s. [from equable.]

1. Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy. Arbutnot on Air.

2. Evenness of temper.

There is also moderation in toleration of fortune in every sorte, which of Tully is called equabilitie.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 128.

EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EQUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

EQUAL. † adj. [æqualis, Lat. Formerly egal was our word for equal; which is used by Chaucer, and was not obsolete when Shakspeare wrote.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Eccles. xxxii. 9.

Equal lot

May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton, P. L.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scotts trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden, Fab. Ded.

5. Impartial; neutral; just.

Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal? Ezek. xviii. 25.

Some few,

Whom equal Jove hath lov'd. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

It — overturned the equallest and best framed government in the world. South, Serm. vi. 42.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden, Æn.

6. Indifferent.

Can you think
That she, that almost is at war with Heaven
For being barren, will with equal eyes
Behold a son of mine? Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and awoke to all equal conditions. Mac. xiii. 23.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spells with themselves. Mac. viii. 30.

EQUAL. † s. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is commoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her: she is no equal for his birth. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

He would make them all equal to the citizens of Rome. Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equal, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superiour; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison, Spect.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my *equal*s in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

3. Equality.

Thou that presum'st to weigh the world anew,
And all things to an equal to restore,
Instead of right, me seems, great wrong dost shew,
And far above thy force's pitch to soar. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 34.

To EQUAL. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

What shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? Lament. ii. 13.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryden.
Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden, Virg.

To EQUALISE. † v. a. [old Fr. equalizer.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Brown.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, frequent in our old writers.

A prince, who, had he not been hindered with domestical discords, would have equalized Cæsar himself. Fuller, Holy War, p. 204.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby on Bodies.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

3. To make equal. A sense not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The Virgin they do at least equalise to Christ.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 5.

The finest poem that we can boast, and which we equalise and perhaps would willingly prefer to the Iliad, is void of those fetters. Orrery on Swift, p. 280.

EQUALISATION.  n. s.* [from equalise.] State of equality.

I have never conceived, or can conceive, that the connexion is strengthened by making the major part of the inhabitants of your country believe, that their ease, and their satisfaction, and their equalization with the rest of their fellow subjects of Ireland, are things adverse to the principles of that connexion. Burke, Lett. on the Affairs of Ireland.

EQUALITY. n. s. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton, P. L.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependence. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.
Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their temper, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUALITY. † adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immortality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. In just proportion.

What I give, let equally be rendered
For my soul's health. Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

EQUALNESS. n. s. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament
That our stars unreconcilable should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. † n. s. [æquanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed. This word is in our old lexicography, though Dr. Johnson gives it neither with authority nor example; and Steele, in the Tatler, introduces it with diffidence, as if he had never seen the word in use. But it was in use long before; for the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar give it.

This watch over a man's self, and the command of his temper, I take to be the greatest of human perfections, &c. I do not know how to express this habit of mind, except you will let me call it equanimity. It is a virtue which is necessary at every hour, in every place, and in all conversations; and is the effect of a regular and exact prudence. Tatler, No. 176.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. s. [æquarc, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton, Opticks.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3s = 36d$. Dict.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dict.

EQUATOR. n. s. [æquator, Latin.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown, Vulg. Err.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

EQUERY, or EQUERRY. † n. s. [Fr. escurie; low Lat. scuria, or stura, a stable for horses. V. Du Cange.]

1. A grand lodge or stable for horses.

2. An officer who has the care of horses.

Quick and active as an equerry, smooth and eloquent as a master of the ceremonies. Tatler, No. 19.

EQUESTRIAN. † adj. [equestris, Latin.]

1. Being on horseback.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spectator.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

It had always been his favourite system, to strengthen the power of the Senate by a close union with the equestrian order. Ld. Lyttelton.

A sort of equestrian order, who by the spirit of that middle situation, are the fittest for preventing things from running to excess. Burke.

EQUANGULAR.* adj. Equangular: equiangular is now the word. See EQUANGULAR.

EQUICRURAL. } adj. [æquus and crus, Latin.]

EQUICRURE. }

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Diogenes on the Soul.

We successively draw lines from angle to angle, until seven equicrural triangles be described. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUIDISTANCE.* n. s. [equidistance, Fr. Cotgrave; æquus and distantia, Lat.] Equal distance or remoteness.

The collateral equidistance of cousin german from the stock whence both descend, hath in it no such appearance of inequality. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, p. 334.

The Antæci are also opposite, but vary neither in meridian nor equidistance from the horizon, respecting either hemisphere. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 5.

From the equidistance of the letters and vowel, they gather the distinction of the persons. Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 11.

EQUIDISTANT. † adj. [equidistant, Fr. Cotgrave; æquus and distant, Latin.] At the same distance.

Into our reason flow, and there doe end
All, that this natural world doth comprehend;
Quotidian things, and equidistant hence,
Shut in, for man, in one circumference. Donne, Poem, p. 240.

The first stars are usually placed in the same concave surface, and receding from us, as they seem to be. Ray.
EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

A circle drawn equidistantly from these describeth the equator.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650) p. 282.

EQUIFORMITY. n. s. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Lat.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser.

Bacon.

Trifling fatality appears in their twelve signs of the zodiac and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

EQUILATERAL. n. s. A side exactly corresponding to others.

Opposite to this castle is erected the sepulchre of Bahaman's beloved queen, in the high-way as we passed: 'tis of four equilaterals raised above eight yards high, the material stone well squared, and very apparent and comely.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 200.

TO EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affliction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle, Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. s. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIOUS. adj. [Lat. æquilibris.] Equally poised.

'Tis a great instance of the Divine Wisdom, that our faculties are made in so regular and equilibrinous an order.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 110.

Our rational and sensitive propensions are made in such a regular and equilibrinous order, that proportionably as the one does increase in activity, the other always decays.

Scott, Christian Life, i. 3.

EQUILIBRIOUSLY. adv. [from equilibrinous.] In equipoise.

Some truths seem almost falsehoods, and some falsehoods almost truths; wherein falsehood and truth seem almost equilibrinously stated, and but a few grains of distinction to bear down the balance. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

EQUILIBRIST. n. s. [Lat. æquilibris.] One that balances a thing equally.

A monkey has lately performed there [at the Haymarket in 1763] both as a rope-dancer, and an equilibrist, such tricks as no man was thought equal to, before the Turk appeared in England. Granger, Biog. Hist. iv. cl. 12.

EQUILIBRITY. n. s. [Lat. æquilibris.] Equality of weight. Cockeram.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrium

If duties descend or no;

Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [æquis and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,

In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe; the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice the equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton, P. L.

Some say the sun

Was bid turn reins from the equinoctial road,

Like distant breadth. Milton, P. L.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades and Thracia's gales,

Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox. Ray on the Creation.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,

If March beheld the first created man;

And since the vernal equinox, the sun

In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,

The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Equinoctial wind; a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,

Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,

No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Lat.]

Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, Fr.] This is all the notice which Dr. Johnson takes concerning the origin of equip. But the word is too curious to be so dismissed. It is properly a naval term; equippe being the old French for a sailor, and so used in the thirteenth century; derived perhaps from the barbarous Latin eschipare, to furnish or adorn vessels; whence echipper or equipper, as Junius has observed, was easily formed. See also Du Cange in V. ESCHIPARE. And thus our own word was also at first written esquippe, and used in the naval sense, as by Barret in 1580: "to esquippe, or furnish ships with all ablements." Of this primary sense of the word Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. Verstegan, many years after Barret's Dictionary was published, tells a ridiculous story of equip being then not generally intelligible: "A principal courtier, writing from London to a personage of authority in the north parts touching the training of men, and providing furniture for war, willed him among other things to equippe his horses: the receiver of the letter, with some labour, came at last to the understanding of it all except equippe, whereof in no sort he could conceive the meaning: in the end he consulted about it with divers gentlemen in the country therabouts; but none could resolve him. It was among them remembered, that we used in our language the word quipping, and the word whipping; the first not proper for horses, but sometimes used to men; the latter not fit for gentlemen's horses, but for carters' jades. In fine, none of them all being able to find, in all the English they had, what equippe might mean; a messenger was sent on purpose to the Court at London, to learn the meaning thereof of the writer of the letter!" Restit. of Decayed Intelligence, chap. 7.]

1. To fit a ship for sea. The present as well as the old sense. See the etymology.
2. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.
3. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country was led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison, Spect.

EQUIPAGE.† n. s. [equipage, Fr.] Our word was pronounced, generally, as savouring of witless affectation by Davies, the contemporary of Shakspeare, in his Paper's Complaint; who, doubtless, was ignorant of the particular usage of it by Spenser.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

Equipage [is] furniture or provision for horsemanship, especially in triumphs or tournaments. Bullokar.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand,
Celestial equipage! Milton, P. L.

3. Attendance; retinue.

How could I rear the Muse on stately stage,
And teach her tread aloft in buskin fine,
With quains Bellona in her equipage. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.
Soon as thy dreadful trumpet begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he so sound. Spenser, F. Q.
When the spirit of wandering takes him, he is attended by his female and their equipage of children.

Swift on giving Badges to the Poor.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

A huge neat's tongue he in his right hand held,
His left was with a good black pudding fill'd:
With a grave look, in this odd equipage
The clownish mimic traverses the stage. Prior.

EQUIPAGED.† adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train

Of squires and ladies, equipaged well,

And entertained them right fairly, as befell. Spenser, F. Q.

We shall all be mounted, equipaged, and in better order to-morrow. Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. (1633,) p. 214.

EQUIP'NDENCY. n. s. [æquus and pendeo, Lat.] The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

The will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand.

South, Sermon, i. 57.

EQUIPMENT. n. s. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accoutring.

2. Accoutrement; equipage.

EQUIPOISE. n. s. [æquus, Lat. and poids, Fr.] Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

In the temperate zone of our life there are few bodies as such an equipoise of humours; but that the prevalence of some one indisposeth the spirits. Glanville, Scepsis.

EQUIPOLLENCE.† n. s. [equipollence, old Fr. from æquus and pollentia, Lat. Chaucer uses our word, in the plural, for equivalents. Rom. R. 7126.] Equality of force or power.

He maketh so proud pretence,

That in his equipollence

He judgeth him equivalent

With God Omnipotent:

But yet beware the rod,

And the stroke of God. Skelton, Poems, p. 173.

EQUIPOLLENCY.* n. s. The modern word for equipollence.

There is no equipollency between these.

Paley, Nat. Theology, ch. 11.

EQUIPOLLENT.† adj. [equipollent, old Fr. equipollens, Lat.] Having equal power or force; equivalent.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon, Essays.

It may be doubtful yet, whether here be not excepted not only fornication itself, but other causes equipollent, and proportional to fornication. Milton, Tetrachordon.

EQUIPOLLENTLY.* adv. [from equipollent.] Equivalently; of the same force.

Both the spirit of God and the power of God St. Paul doth equipollently express by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Barrow, Sermon, vol. 3, S. 34.

EQUIPONDERANCE. } n. s. [æquus and pondus, Lat.]

EQUIPONDERANCY. } Equality of weight; equipoise. Dict.

EQUIPONDERANT. adj. [æquus and ponderans, Lat.]

Being of the same weight.

Their lungs may serve to render their bodies equiponderant to the water. Ray, on the Creation.

A column of air, of any given diameter, is equiponderant to a column of quicksilver of between twenty-nine and thirty inches height. Locke.

TO EQUIPONDERATE. v. n. [æquus and pondero, Lat.]

To weigh equal to any thing.

The heaviness of any weight doth increase proportionably to its distance from the centre: thus one pound A at D, will equiponderate unto two pounds at B, if the distance A D is double unto A B. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EQUIPONDIOS. adj. [æquus and pondus, Lat.] Equilibrated; equal on either part. Not in use.

The Scepticks affected an indifferent equipondious neutrality, as the only means to their ataraxia. Glanville, Scepsis.

EQU

EQUITABLE. adj. [equitable, Fr.]

1. Just; due to justice.

It seems but equitable to give the artists leave to name them as they please. Boyle, Scept. Chymist.

2. Loving justice; candid; impartial; as, an equitable judge.

EQUITABLENESS. * n. s. [from equitable.] Justness. Demonstrating both the equitableness and practicableness of the thing. Locke.

EQUITABLY. adv. [from equitable.] Justly; impartially.

EQUITATION. * n. s. [old Fr. equitation, "a riding on horseback." Cotgrave. Mr. Boswell's remark, therefore, as to the making this word, whether by Lord Pembroke or himself, may now be softened down into an imitation of the French.] Riding on horseback; management of a horse.

This day we were to begin our equitation, as I said; for I would needs make a word too. It is remarkable, that my noble, and to me most constant friend, the earl of Pembroke, has since hit upon the very same word. The title of the first edition of his lordship's very useful book was, in simple terms, "A method of breaking horses, and teaching soldiers to ride." The title of the second edition is, "Military equitation."

Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

EQUITY. † n. s. [équité, Fr. æquitas, Lat.]

1. Justice; right; honesty.

Foul subordination is predominant, And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. Christianity secures both the private interests of men and the publick peace, enforcing all justice and equity. Tillotson.

2. Impartiality.

Liking their own somewhat better than other men's, even because they are their own, they must in equity allow us to be like unto them in this affection. Hooker.

3. [In law.] The rules of decision observed by the court of Chancery, as distinct from the literal maxims of law.

In the court of Chancery there are two distinct tribunals; the one ordinary, being a court of common law; the other extraordinary, being a court of equity. Blackstone.

EQUIVALENCE. } n. s. [æquus and valro, Lat.]

EQUIVALENCY. } Equality of power or worth. Must the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formally or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hammond.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, but this equivalence only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Ayliffe, Parergon.

7b EQUIVALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To equi- ponderate; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUIVALENT. † adj. [equivalent, old Fr. æquis and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

Things

Well-nigh equivalent, and neight'ring value, By lot are parted; but the value, high heav'n, thy share, In equal balance laid with earth and hell, Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion. Prior.

2. Equal in any excellence.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second! which compell'd Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come And gaze, and worship thee. Milton, P. L.

3. Equal in force or power.

EQU

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength

Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets,

None offering fight.

Milton, S. A.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of publick utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least equivalent to the easier kind of necessity.

Hooker.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent.

South.

EQUIVALENT. n. s. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;

It rests for you to make th' equivalent.

Dryden, Homer.

Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be equivalent for their breach of another.

Rogers.

EQUIVALENTLY. * adv. [from equivalent.] In an equal manner; equipollently.

Insufficient aim I

His grace to magnify,

And laude equivalently.

Skellon, Poems, p. 88.

We seldom in kind, or equivalently, are ourselves clear of that which we charge upon others.

Barrow, Sermon on St. Matt. vii. i.

EQUIVOCAL. adj. [æquivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall,

Being strong on both sides, are equivocal. Shakspeare, Othello.

Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained.

Stillington.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms.

Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced.

Harris.

There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves.

Ray.

Those half-learn'd wittings, num'rous in our isle,

As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;

Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,

Their generation's so equivocal. Pope, Essay on Criticism.

EQUIVOCAL. n. s. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us?

Dennis.

EQUIVOCALLY. adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper sense and signification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called.

South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the Divine judgements.

Bentley.

EQUIVOCALNESS. † n. s. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning.

A language of a philosophical institution, or a real character, would be by much the most easy; as being free from all anomaly, equivocalness, redundancy, and unnecessary grammatications.

Dalgarno, Didasc. (Oxf. 1680.) p. 52.

Distinguish the equivocalness or lassitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration.

Norris.

The equivocalness of the title gave a handle to those that came after to understand it of a form of faith composed by Athanasius.

Waterland, Hist. of the Ath. Creed.

E R A

To EQUIVOCATE.† v. n. [equivocatio, Latin.]

To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

They were allowed, and taught, by the Jesuits, to equivocate upon oath. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) sign. V. 3.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

My soul disdain'd a promise; —

— But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promis'd:
But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falsehoods. Smith.

To EQUIVOCATE.* v. a. To render capable of a double interpretation.

He equivocated his vow by a mental reservation.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 142.

EQUIVOCATION. n. s. [equivocatio, Lat.] Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrested. Hooker.

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

EQUIVOCATOR.† n. s. [from equivocate.] One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator that could swear in both the scales against either scale; yet could not equivocate to Heaven.

Shakespeare.

The second rank is of liars, and equivocators, as Apollo Pythius, and the like. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 43.

A secret liar or equivocator is such a one as by mental reservations, and other tricks, deceives him to whom he speaks, being lawfully called to deliver all the truth.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 390.

EQUIVOQUE.* n. s. [old Fr. equivoque.] Many now write our own word, like the French; but equivoque is in our old lexicography, (as in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar,) and so written by our old authors. Equivoque should, therefore, be neglected.]

1. Equivocation; double meaning.

I know your equivoques;

You're grown the better fathers of 'em o' late.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

2. An expression where a word has at once different meanings; a quibble.

I have by me the following unprinted lines on Miss M.'s dancing, 1743; which, making allowance for the equivoque in the last stanza, are not bad:

Accomplish'd maid, my trivial rhyme
Must do thy graces wrong,
Who dost not only dance in time,
But steal, like time, along.

Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 42.

EQUIVOQUE.* See EQUIVOKE.

ER. A syllable in the middle of names or places, comes by contraction from the Saxon papa, dwellers.

Gibson's Camden.

ER.* A syllable at the end of the word, signifying the inhabitants of a place, may be deduced from papa also, or from the Goth. waír, a man; as, Lundenwer, by contraction, Lundener, Londoner, i. e. a man of London; though the Saxons certainly called the Londoners Lunden-pape. See Lye's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary and Greenwood's Grammar.]

ERA.† n. s. [era, Latin. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of the etymology. Era, in old Latin, signified the same as number; and hera, in the Spanish tongue, is used for time. Thus the Saxon geap, and thence our year. See Gregory's

Posthuma, 1650, p. 146, where several mistaken and improbable conjectures concerning the origin of this word are noticed.] The account of time from any particular date or epoch.

Our times are dated, and our eras move:

They govern, and enlighten all below,

As thou dost all above.

Prior.

To ERA'DIATE.* v. n. [Latin e, from, and radius, a ray.] To shoot like a ray.

A kind of life eradiating and resulting both from intellect and Psyche. More, Notes on Psychozois.

ERADIA'TION.† n. s. [from eradiare.] Emission of radiance.

God gives me a heart humbly to converse with him, from whom alone are all the eradiations of true majesty. K. Charles.

He first supposeth some eradiation and emanation of spirit, or secret quality, or whatsoever, to be directed from our bodies to the blood dropped from it. Hales, Rom. p. 288.

To ERA'DICATE.† v. a. [eradicare, Latin. This word is pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, uncouth and unusual.]

1. To pull up by the root.

He suffereth the poison of Nubia to be gathered, and Aconite to be eradicated, yet this not to be moved. Brown.

2. To completely destroy; to end; to cut off.

If a gouty person can bring himself entirely to a milk diet, he may so change the whole juices of his body as to eradicate the distemper. Arbutnot on Diet.

If vice cannot wholly be eradicated, it ought at least to be confined to particular objects. Swift, Examina er

ERADICA'TION.† n. s. [from eradicate.]

1. The act of tearing up by the root; destruction; excision.

Persecuted both by force and fraud, and that to their utter extinguishment and eradication from the face of the earth.

Dean King, Sermon. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 14.

Be true and sincere to thy best hopes, and interest, by a perfect eradication of all thy exorbitant lusts and corruptions.

Hallywell, Melampr. p. 105.

2. The state of being torn up by the roots.

They affirm the roots of mandrakes give a shriek upon eradication, which is false below confutation. Brown.

ERA'DICATIVE.* adj. [from eradicate.] Curing radically; driving quite away.

ERA'DICATIVE.* n. s. A medicine which cures radically.

Thus sometimes eradicatives are omitted, in the beginning requisite; as in violent motions of the matter, specially to the more noble parts: then, how absurd to rest in lenitives.]

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 88

To ERA'SE. v. a. [rasar, Fr.]

1. To destroy; to excise.

The heads of birds, for the most part, are given erased; that is, plucked off. Peasam on Blazoning.

2. To expunge; to rub out.

ERA'SEMENT. n. s. [from erast.]

1. Destruction; devastation.

2. Expunction; abolition.

ERA'STIAN.* n. s. One of a religious sect or faction, which arose in England during the time of the civil wars in 1647, thus called from their leader Thomas Erastus, [a physician of Switzerland,] whose distinguishing doctrine it was, that the church had no right to discipline, that is, no regular power to excommunicate, exclude, censure, absolve, decree, or the like. Chambers.

ERA'STIANISM.* n. s. [from Erastian.] The doctrine or principles of Erastians.

Kings and states might have come, by this time of day, to think, that their authority had something to do in settling of the church; and that the gospel was beholding to them. At least sycophants and flatterers would so have complimented them; and Erastianism would have had a plausible plea. It is a branch of Deism. It stands and falls with that.

Leslie, Short Method with the Jews.

ERASURE. * n. s. Rasure; which see.

ERE. † adv. [æp, Saxon; æir, Gothick; eer, Dutch.

This word is sometimes vitiously written e'er, as if from ever. It is likewise written or before ever, on and æp in Saxon being indiscriminately written. To this remark of Lye, adduced by Dr. Johnson, it may be added that the old English or and ere were also indiscriminately used. Thus, "No man will put his son to a botcher to learne or he binde him prentise to a taylor," i. e. ere, before. Sir T. Elyot's Governour. Again, "They were long time full busie about me, or I consented to them to be a priest." Fox's Acts and Mon. Thus also in the Version of the Bible of 1578. "He knew all things or ever they were made," Ecclesiastic. xxxiii. 20., which, in the present version, is, "ere ever they were created." Ere was at first, er: "Long er the bright sunne uprisen was," Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.] Before; sooner than.

Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand.

Shakspeare.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came to the bottom of the den.

Daniel, vi. 24.

Just trial, ere I merit My exaltation without change or end.

Milton, P. L.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please, Ere yet the pine descended to the seas; Ere sails were spread new oceans to explore.

Dryden, Ovid.

The birds shall cease to tune their ev'ning song, The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move, And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love.

Pope.

ERE. prep. Before.

Our fruitful Nile

Flow'd ere the wonted season.

Dryden, All for Love.

ERELONG. adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tempus.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many colours, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon.

Sidney.

The wild horse having enmity with the stag, came to a man to desire aid, who mounted upon his back, and following the stag, erelong slew him.

Spenser on Ireland.

Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another face than it had erelong.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

They swim in joy, Erelong to swim at large, and laugh, for which The world erelong a world of tears must weep.

Milton, P. L.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong Will take the nest.

Dryden, Virgil.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a portion of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the springs of nature's operations.

Spectator.

ERENOW. adv. [from ere and now.] Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, some short time allow; My father has repented him erenow.

Dryden, Cong. of Granada.

Had the world eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long erenow.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

EREWHILE. } adv. [from ere and while.] Some-time
EREWHILES. } ago; before a little while.

I am as fair now as I was erewhile:

Since night you lov'd me, yet since night you left me.

Shakspeare.

We sit down to our meals, suspect not the intrusion of armed uninvited guests, who erewhile, we know, were wont to surprise us.

Decay of Piety.

TO ERECT. † v. a. [erectus, Latin.]

1. To raise in a strait line; to place perpendicularly to the horizon.

2. To ERECT a Perpendicular. To cross one line by another at right angles.

3. To raise; to build.

He erected there an altar.

Gen. xxxiii. 20.

Happier walls expect,

Which, wand'ring long, at last thou shalt erect.

Dryden, Virg.

There are many monuments erected to benefactors to the republick.

Addison on Italy.

4. To establish anew; to settle.

'Great difference there is between their proceedings who erect a new commonwealth, which is to have neither regiment nor religion the same that was, and theirs who only reform a decayed estate.

Hooker.

He suffers seventy-two distinct nations to be erected out of the first monarchy under distinct governours.

Raleigh.

5. To elevate; to exalt.

I, who am a party, am not to erect myself into a judge.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

I am far from pretending infallibility: that would be to erect myself into an apostle.

Locke, on St. Paul's Epistles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, and have recourse to their own invention, rather than suffer him to erect himself into an author with impunity.

Addison.

6. To lift up; without the relative pronoun, as in the three preceding examples given by Dr. Johnson, which denote personal exaltation or honour.

Woe unto me, should sin my soul infect,
Who dare not now, though innocent, erect
My downcast looks.

Sandys, Job, p. 17.

7. To raise consequences from premises.

From fallacious foundations and misapprehended mediums, men erect conclusions no way inferrible from the premises.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Men being too hasty to erect to themselves general notions and ill-grounded theories, find themselves deceived in their stock of knowledge.

Locke.

Malebranche erects this proposition, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin.

Locke.

8. To animate; not to depress; to encourage.

Why should not hope

As much erect our thoughts as fear deject them.

Denham.

TO ERECT. † v. n. To rise upright.

The trefoil against rain swelleth in the stalk, and so standeth more upright; for by wet, stalks do erect, and leaves bow down.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ERECT. adj. [erectus, Latin.]

1. Upright; not leaning; not prone.

Birds, far from proneness, are almost erect; advancing the head and breast in progression, only prone in volitation.

Brown.

Basil tells us that the serpent went erect like man.

Brown.

2. Directed upwards.

Vain were vows,

And plaints, and suppliant hands, to Heav'n erect.

Philips.

3. Bold; confident; unshaken.

Let no vain fear thy generous ardour tame;
But stand erect, and sound as loud as fame.

Glanville.

4. Vigorous; not depressed.

That vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, is wasted or dulled.

Hooker.

ERECTED. * adj. [Lat. erectus.] Aspiring; generous; noble: sublime.

Having found in him a mind of most excellent composition, a piercing wit, quite void of ostentation, high erected thoughts seated in a heart of courtesy.

Sidney, Arcad. b. i.

Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell From heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Glory, the reward

That sole excites to high attempts, the flame

E R E

Of most erected spirits, most temper'd pure
 Ethereal, who all pleasures else despise.

Milton, P. R.

ERÉCTION. n. s. [from erect.]

1. The act of raising, or state of being raised upward.

We are to consider only the erection of the hills above the ordinary land. Brerewood on Languages.

2. The act of building or raising edifices.

The first thing which moveth them thus to cast up their poison, are certain solemnities usual at the first erection of churches. Hooker.

Pillars were set up above one thousand four hundred and twenty-six years before the flood, counting Seth to be an hundred years old at the erection of them. Raleigh, Hist.

3. Establishment; settlement.

It must needs have a peculiar influence upon the erection, continuance, and dissolution of every society. South.

4. Elevation; exaltation of sentiments.

Her peerless height my mind to high erection draws up. Sidney.

5. Act of rousing; excitement to attention.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that is a shrinking, and likewise an inquisition what the matter should be; and in that it is a motion of erection: so that when a man would listen suddenly he starteth; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend. Bacon.

ERÉCTIVE. adj. [Fr. erectif.] Raising; advancing; lifting up. Cotgrave.

ERÉCTNESS. † n. s. [from erect.] Uprightness of posture or form.

We take erectness strictly as Galen defined it: they only, sayeth he, have an erect figure, whose spine and thigh-bone are curied on right lines. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Nor do any persons certainly better deserve the name of men, than such as allow their reason a full employment, and think not the erectness of man's stature a sufficient distinction of him from brutes. Stillington, Orig. Sac. i. 1.

ERÉCTOR. n. s. [Lat. erector.] One who raises or constructs, or causes to be raised or made. Cotgrave uses this word under dresseur, and defines it "a raiser, framer, fashioner, &c."

Rehoboam's young counsellors were, in some relation, the erectors of Jeroboam's calves.

W. Montagu, Dev. Ex. P. i. (1643), p. 94.

ERÉMIT. † n. s. [old French, ermite; Lat. eremita; from the Gr. ἐρημος, a wilderness. Eremita is our old word, in use long before Raleigh wrote, and continued till towards the close of the seventeenth century.] One who lives in a wilderness: one who lives in solitude: a hermit; a solitary: we now say hermit.

Antonius the eremite findeth a fifth commodity not inferior to any of these four. Raleigh, Hist.

Embryos and idiot eremites and friars, White, black, and grey, with all their trampery. Milton, P. L.

ERÉMITAGE. n. s. [from eremite; old Fr. ermitage.] The residence of a hermit.

But of his end he could find nothing, nor ever should have known aught, if good fortune had not offered to his view an old physician, who had in his custody a leaden box, which, as he affirmed, was found in the ruins of an old eremitage, as it was a-repairing. Shelton, D. Quetele, p. 136.

ERÉMITICAL. † adj. [from eremite.] Religiously solitary; leading the life of a hermit.

The austere and eremitical harbingers of Christ, it seems, preached there oft, and was heard gladly.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

They have multitudes of religious orders, eremitical and cenobetical. Stillington.

When we descried him [Dr. Johnson] from above, he had a most eremitical appearance. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

ERÉPTATION. n. s. [erepto, Latin.] A creeping forth. Bailey.

E R M

ERÉPTION. † n. s. [ereptio, Latin.] A snatching or taking away by force. Cockeram.

To ERÉGAT. v. n. [from the Latin ergo, therefore.]

To draw conclusions according to the forms of logic. See ERGO.

Little doth it concern us what the schoolmen ergat in their schools. Hewyl, Serm. (1658), p. 178.

ERGO.  adv.* [Latin.] Therefore. A term in logic, denoting consequently. It is often used in jocular argumentation.

Cornelius told him that he was a lying rascal; that an universale was not the object of imagination, and that there was no such thing in reality, or à parte rei. But I can prove, quoth Crambe, that there are clysters à parte rei, but clysters are universales; ergo, &c. Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

If black and white horses are devised, pyed horses shall pass by such devise: but black and white horses are devised; ergo, the plaintiff shall have the pyed horses.

Fortescue, Specimen of Scriblers's Reports.

ERÉGOT. n. s. A sort of stub, like a piece of soft horn, about the bigness of a chestnut, which is placed behind and below the pastern joint, and is commonly hid under the tuft of the fetlock.

Parmer's Dict.

ERÉGOTISM.  n. s.* [from ergo.] A conclusion logically deduced.

States are not governed by erégotisms.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 4.

ERÉACH.  n. s.* [Irish] A pecuniary fine. Hume writes this word eric; but Spenser erlach.

The brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and the friends of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an erlach. Spenser on Ireland.

By the brehon law or custom no crime, however enormous, was punished with death, but by a fine or pecuniary mulct, which was levied upon the criminal. Murder itself was atoned for in this manner; and each man, according to his rank, had a different rate or value affixed to him, which was called his eric.

Hume, Hist. Gr. Br. i. 43.

ERÉIN.  n. s.* [Irish; whence the old French also, Erin.] Ireland.

The most ancient Irish called their country Erin, or Eire, or Iere; which word imports a western country; and by this name it was called by the old Greek geographers.

Campbell, on the Eve. and Lit. Hist. of Ireland, p. 14.

ERÉNGO. † n. s. Sea-holly. A plant. More correctly, eryngo, from the Gr. ἐρύγγιον, and Fr. erynge. But Dryden writes "hot erengoes."

ERÉSTICAL. adj. [ἐρίς.] Controversial; relating to dispute; containing controversies.

ERÉSTICK.  adj.* Eristical; controversial.

So many eristick writings. Life of Firmin, (1698), p. 20.

ERÉKE. † adj. [Sax eapz, slow, slothful; Gr. ἀργός, the same. In Scottish, ergh is hesitating.] Idle; lazy; slothful. An old word; whence we now say irksome.

For men therein should hem delite;

And of that dede be not erke,

But oft sithe haunt that werke. Chaucer, Rom. R. 4867.

ERÉMLIN. n. s. [diminutive of ermin; armelin, Fr.]

An ermine. See ERMINE.

Silver skins,

Passing the hate spot ermelins.

Sidney.

ERMINE. n. s. [hermine, French, from armenius, Latin.] An animal in cold countries, which very nearly resembles a weasel in shape; having a white pile; and the tip of the tail black, and furnishing a valuable fur. The fell-mongers and furriers put upon it little bits of Lombardy lambskin, which is noted for its shining black colour, the better to set off the whiteness of the ermine. Dict. Trevoux.

Ermine is the fur of a little beast, about the bigness of a weasel, called Mus Armenius; for they are found in Armenia. Peacham on Blazoning.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermine, will not bear a soil. Dryden.
ERMINED. adj. [from ermine.] Clothed with ermine.

• Arcadia's countess, here in ermin'd pride,
Is there Pastora by a fountain's side. Pope.
ERNE. } Do immediately flow from the Saxon ern,
ERON. } eapn, a cottage, or place of retirement.

Gibson's Camden.

To ERODE. v. a. [erodo, Latin.] To canker, or eat away; to corrode.

It hath been anciently received, that the sea-air hath antipathy with the lungs, if it cometh near the body, and erodeth them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The blood, being too sharp or thin, erodes the vessel.

Wiseman.

To EROGATE. v. a. [Lat. erogo.] To bestow upon; to give.

To the acquiring of science belongeth understanding and memory, which as a treasury hath power to retain, and also to erogate and distribute when opportunity happeneth.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 198.

No man can supererogate, till he have first erogated. In plainer terms, no man can have any thing to spare to bestow upon others, (for this they mean by supererogating,) till he hath done all that he is bound to do for himself.

Bp. Patrick, Answer to the Touchstone, p. 119.

EROGATION. n. s. [erogatio, Latin.] The act of giving or bestowing; distribution.

Some think such manner of erogation not to be worthy the name of liberality.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 108. b.

Touching the wealth of England, it never also appeared so much by public erogations and taxes, which the Long Parliament raised.

Howell, Lett. iv. 47.

EROSION. n. s. [erosion, old Fr. erosio, Lat.]

1. The act of eating away.
2. The state of being eaten away; canker; corrosion.

As sea-salt is a sharp solid body, in a constant diet of salt meat, it breaks the vessels, produceth erosions of the solid parts, and all the symptoms of the sea-scurvy. Arbuthnot.

EROTICAL. n. s. [ἐρωτικός, Gr. from ἐρως, love; EROTICK. } erotique, French.] Relating to the passion of love.

Jason Pratensis, who writes copiously of this erotic love, doth place and reckon it among the affections of the brain.

Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 452.

If he be born when Mars and Venus are in conjunction, he will undoubtedly be inclined to love and erotic melancholy.

Ferrand on Love Melancholy, (1640.) p. 150.

To ERR. v. n. [erro, Latin.]

1. To wander; to ramble.
A storm of strokes, well meant, with fury flies,
And errs about their temples, ears, and eyes. Dryden, Virg.
The rains arise, and fires their warmth dispense;
And fix'd and erring stars dispose their influence. Dryden, Virg.

2. To miss the right way; to stray.
We have erred and strayed like lost sheep. Common Prayer.
I will not lag behind, nor err
The way, thou leading. Milton, P. L.

3. To deviate from any purpose.
But errs not nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend. Pope.

4. To commit errors; to mistake.
It is a judgement main'd and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err,
Against all rules of nature. Shakespeare, Othello.

Do they not err that devise evil?

Prov. xiv. 22.

Possibly the man may err in his judgement of circumstances, and therefore let him fear; but because it is not certain he is mistaken, let him not despair.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Nor has it only been the heat of erring persons that has been thus mischievous, but sometimes men of right judgements have too much contributed to the breach.

Decay of Piety.

The muses' friend, unto himself severe,
With silent pity looks on all that err. Waller.

He who from the reflected image of the sun in water would conclude of light and heat, could not err more grossly. Chryse.

To ERR. v. a. To mislead; to cause to err.

Sometimes he [the devil] tempts by covetousness, drunkenness, pleasure, pride, &c. errs, dejects, saves, kills, protects, and rides some men as they do their horses.

Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 50.

ERRABLE. adj. [from err.] Liable to err; liable to mistake.

ERRABLENESS. n. s. [from errable.] Liableness to error; liableness to mistake.

We may infer, from the errableness of our nature, the reasonableness of compassion to the seduced. Decay of Piety.

ERRAND. n. s. æpend, Saxon; arend, Danish; erende, Icelandick, which Lye pronounces to be from the Gothick airus, a messenger. Chaucer uses erande for a message.] A message; something to be told or done by a messenger; a mandate; a commission. It is generally used now only in familiar language.

Servants being commanded to go, shall stand still, till they have their errand warranted unto them. Hooker.

But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

— I told him that your father was in Venice. Shakespeare.

A quean! have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? Shakespeare.

When he came, behold the captains of the host were sitting, and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. 2 Kings, ix. 3.

From them I go

This uncouth errand sole. Milton, P. L.

His eyes,

That run through all the heavens, or down to th' earth,
Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton, P. L.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, on such an errand came. Dryden, Homer.

ERRANT. adj. [errans, Latin; errant, French.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Chief of domestick knights, and errant,
Either for chartel or for warrant. Hudibras.

2. Vile; abandoned; completely bad. From the first application of the word to a vagabond or stroller, as by Chaucer: "An outlaw, or else a thief errant," Manciple's Tale. The word has also been written errand, and in this sense is now usually arrant. See ARRANT.

Good impertinence:

Thy company, if I slept not very well
Anights, would make me an errant fool with questions. B. Jonson, Catiline.

3. Deviating from a certain course.
Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cres.

ERR

4. In law, itinerant: applied to judges who go the circuit, and to bailiffs at large.

Our judges of assize are called justices errant, because they go no direct course, but this way and that way from one town to another, where their sittings be appointed; and so is a bailiff at large called a bailiff errant. Butler, Eng. Gram. 1633.

ERRANTRY. n. s. [from errant.]

1. An errant state; the condition of a wanderer.

After a short space of errantry upon the seas, he got safe back to Dunkirk. Addison, Frecholder.

2. The employment of a knight errant.

ERRATA. n. s. [Latin. The singular erratum, is sometimes used.] The faults of the printer inserted in the beginning or end of the book.

If he meet with faults besides those that the errata take notice of, he will consider the weakness of the author's eyes.

Boyle.

ERRATICAL. adj. [erraticus, Latin.] Uncertain; keeping no regular order; wandering.

This man's wit wanders with his erratical synod.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 200.

Fifteen days he remained quietly at home, without giving any argument, or seconding his former vanities; in which time past, many pleasant encounters between him and his two gossips, the curate and barber, upon that point which he defended, to wit, that the world needed nothing so much as knights errant, and that the erratical knighthood ought to be again renewed therein. Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 11. b.

ERRATICALLY. adv. [from erratical or erratick.]

Without rule; without any established method or order.

They come not forth in generations erratically, or different from each other, but in specifical and regular shupes. Brown.

ERRATICK. adj. [erraticus, Latin; erratique, Fr.]

1. Wandering; uncertain; keeping no certain order; holding no established course. It is applied by Chaucer to the planets.

The earth, and each erratick world,
Around the sun their proper centre whirl'd,
Compos'd but one extended vast machine.

Blackmore.

Through the vast waves the dreadful wonders move,

Hence nam'd erratick. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Irregular; changeable.

They are incommoded with a slimy mattery cough, stink of breath, and an erratick fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ERRATICK. n. s. A rogue. See the second sense of ERRANT. Cockeram.

ERRATION. n. s. [Lat. erratio.] A wandering to and fro. Cockeram.

ERRATUM. See ERRATA.

ERRHINE. n. s. έρρῖνα, Gr. errhine, old Fr.]

What is snuffed up the nose, to occasion sneezing.

We see usage or letony bruised, sneezing powder, and other powders or liquors, which the physicians call errhines, put into the nose to draw phlegm from the head. Bacon.

ERRING. adj. [from err.] Erratick; uncertain; perplexed with error.

Tongues I'll hang on every tree,

That shall civil sayings shew;

Some, how brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage. Shakespeare, As you like it.

He all those erring parts describ'd so well,
That Theseus conquer'd, and the monster fell. Dryden, Æn.

ERRONEOUS. adj. [from err, Norm. French; erroné, Cotgrave; erro, Lat.]

1. Wandering; unsettled.

They roam

Erroneous and disconsolate, themselves
Accusing, and their chiefs improvident
Of military chance. Philips.

ERR

This circle, by being placed here, stopped much of the erroneous light, which otherwise would have disturbed the vision.

Newton, Opticks.

Unblam'd abundance crown'd the royal board,

What time this done rever'd her prudent lord;

Who now, so heaven decrees, is doom'd to mourn,

Bitter constraint! erroneous and forlorn. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Irregular; wandering from the right road.

If the vessels, instead of breaking, yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniencies of erroneous circulation; that is, when the blood strays into the vessels destined to carry serum or lymph. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Mistaking; misled by error.

Thou art far from destroying the innocent with the guilty, and the erroneous with the malicious. King Charles.

There is the erroneous as well as the rightly informed conscience. South.

4. Mistaken; not conformable to truth; physically false.

Their whole counsel is condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be for a while. Hooker.

A wonderful erroneous observation that walketh about, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and experience. Bacon.

The phenomena of light have been hitherto explained by supposing that they arise from new modifications of the rays, which is an erroneous supposition. Newton, Opticks.

ERRONEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.] By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy.

Hooker.

I could not discover the lenity of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps, erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

ERRONEOUSNESS. n. s. [from erroneous.] Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phenomena may be explained by his hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

ERROUR. n. s. [old French, errour; modern, erreur; Lat. error.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Errour is a mistake of our judgement, giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful errour, melancholy's child!

Why dost thou shew to the apt thoughts of men,

The things that are not? Shakespeare.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,

What damned errour, but some sober brow

Will bless it? Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

He look'd like nature's errour, as the mup

And body were not of a piece design'd,

But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryden.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

The rest of his journey, his errour, by sea, the sack of Troy, are not put as the argument of the work.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

What brought you living to the Stygian stage?

Driv'n by the winds and errours of the sea;

Or did you Heaven's superiour doom obey. Dryden, Æn.

4. [In theology.] Sin.

Blood he offered for himself, and for the errours of the people. Heb. ix. 7.

5. [In law, more especially in our common law.] An error in pleading, or in the process; and the writ, which is brought for remedy of this oversight, is called a writ of errour, which lies to redress false judgement given in any court of record. Counsel.

ERS, or Bitter Vetch. n. s. [vicia vallis amara.] A plant.

ERSE, or EARSE.* n. s. The language of the Highlands of Scotland. The word is also used adjectively.

After all that has been done for the instruction of the Highlanders, the antipathy between their language and literature still continues; and no man that has learned only Erse is, at this time, able to read. The Erse has many dialects, and the words used in some islands are not always known in others.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

There are, I believe, no Erse manuscripts. None of the old families had a single letter in Erse that we heard of Johnson, Lett. to Boswell.

It is very well known, that the Earse dialect of the Gaelic was never written nor printed, until Mr. Macfarlane, late minister of Killinor, Argyleshire, published, in 1754, a translation of Baxter's Call to the Unconverted.

Shaw on the Authenticity of Ossian, p. 8.

ERSH, or EARSH.* n. s. The same as eddish; the stubble after corn is cut; grass of the second crop. [Sax. edisc.] See EDDISH. Ersh is the word in Sussex; errish, in Devonshire.

ERST.† adv. [erst, German; æpsta, Saxon. The superlative of the Saxon æp, old English, er, before; now ere. See ERE.]

1. First.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. At first; in the beginning.

Fame that her high worth to raise,
Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise.

Milton, Arcades.

3. Once; when time was.

He taught us erst the heifer's tale to view.

Gay.

4. Formerly; long ago.

The future few or more, howe'er they be,
Were destin'd erst, nor can by fate's decree
Be now cut off.

Prior.

5. Before; till then; till now.

As signal now in low dejected state,
As erst in highest, behold him.
Opener mine eyes,
Dim erst: dilated spirits, ampler heart.

Milton, S. A.

Milton.

The Rhodians, who erst thought themselves at great quiet were now overtaken with a sudden mischief.

Kneller.

ERSTWHILE.* adv. [erst and while.] Till then; till now; afortime.

Those thick and clammy vapours which erstwhile ascended in such vast measures, and had filled the vault of heaven with smoke and darkness, must at length obey the laws of their nature and gravity, and so descend again in abundant showers.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 142.

ERUBE'SCENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. erubescence, ERUBE'SCENCY. } "blushing," Colgrave, from erubescencia, Latin.] The act of growing red;
redness.

ERUBE'SCENT. adj. [erubescens, Latin.] Reddish;
somewhat red; inclining to redness.

To ERUCT. v. a. [eructo, Latin.] To belch; to break wind from the stomach.

To ERUCTATE.* v. a. [Lat. eructo.] To belch; to vomit forth.

They would make us believe in Syracuse, now Messina, that Ætna in times past hath eructated such huge gobbets of fire, that the sparks of them have burnt houses in Malta, above fifty miles off, transported hither by a direct strong wind.

Hawell, Lett. l. i. 27.

ERUCTATION.† n. s. [old Fr. eructation.]

1. The act of belching.

He was to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

2. Belch; the matter vented from the stomach.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations, either with the taste of the aliment, acid, inodorous, or fetid. Arbuthnot.

3. Any sudden burst of wind or matter.

Thermæ, are hot springs, or fiery eructations; such as burst forth of the earth during earthquakes. Woodward.

ERUDITE.* adj. [Lat. eruditus.] Learned. It sometimes, as Mr. Mason also has observed, conveys a sneer. The word is modern in our language.

Your Latin lecture is as good Latin as the erudite Germans speak or write. Ld. Chatterfield.

ERUDITION. n. s. [eruditio, Latin.] • Learning; knowledge obtained by study and instruction.

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature;

Shakespeare.

Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition.

The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young. Wotton.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal;
for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived. Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, fill their sermons with philosophical terms. Swift.

ERUGINOUS.† adj. [erugineux, old Fr. eruginosus, Latin.] Partaking of the substance and nature of copper.

Copperas is a rough and acrimonious kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Broune.

Agues depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, or upon an adust stibial or eruginous sulphur. Harvey.

ERUPTION. n. s. [eruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet, Theory.

2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison, Guardian.

3. Sudden excursion of an hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold
Celestial spirits in bondage.

Milton, P. L.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. Violent exclamation.

To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions. Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise.

South.

5. Efflorescence; pustules,

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth

In strange eruptions. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions on the skin.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ERUPTIVE.† adj. [eruptus, Latin.]

1. Bursting forth.

'Tis listening fear, and dumb amazement all,
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south eruptive through the cloud. Thomson, Sum.

2. Exhibiting diseased eruption.

I mentioned to you the striking effects produced by the spirit of sea-salt in all our putrid diseases of the worst kind; I mean the eruptive fevers, the petechial fever, the jail-distemper, and the malignant sore throat. Sir W. Fordyce on the Mur. Acid, p. 1.

ERYNGO. n. s. [eryngion.] A plant. See ERINGO.

ERYSIPELAS. n. s. [ερυσίπελας, Gr.]

An erysipelas is generated by a hot serum in the blood, and affects the superficies of the skin with a shining pale red, or citron colour, without pulsation or circumscribed tumour, spreading from one place to another. Wise man, Surgery.

ERYSIPELATUS. * adj. [from erysipelas, Fr. erysipelatur.] Having the nature of an erysipelas.

When a person, who for some years had been subject to erysipelatus fevers, perceived the usual forerunning symptoms to come on, I advised her to drink tar-water. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 6.

ESCALADE. n. s. [French.] The act of scaling the walls of a fortification.

In Geneva one meets with the ladders, petard, and other utensils, which were made use of in their famous escalade. Addison.

ESCALOP. n. s. See SCOLLOP.

1. A shellfish, whose shell is regularly indented.

The shells of those cockles, escalops, and periwinkles, which have greater gravity, were enclosed in stone. Woodward.

2. An inequality of margin; indenture.

The figure of the leaves is divided into jags and escalops, curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

ESCAPADE. n. s. [French.] Irregular motion of a horse.

He with a graceful pride,
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound
Pressing, and seeming still to quit his ground. Dryden.

TO ESCAPE. v. a. [echaper, French.]

1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son? Wake.

2. To pass unobserved by one.

Men are blind with ignorance and error: many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived. Hooker.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetical sight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryden, Don Sebast. Pref.

TO ESCAPE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger: to avoid punishment or harm.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on a horse. 1 Kings, xx. 20.

They escaped all safe to land. Acts, xxvii. 44.

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Gen. xxi. 17.

Whoso plenseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. Ecc. vii. 26.

He might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

To convince us that there was no way to escape by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Laws are not executed; men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts, Logick.

ESCAPE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psalms, iv. 7.

He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison, Guardian.

2. Excursion; sally.

We made an escape, not so much to seek our own, as to be instruments of your safety. Denham, Sophy.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Chanc.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.

St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Raleigh.

5. Sally; flight; irregularity. The example which Dr. Johnson brings from Shakspeare is in point; but that from Milton belongs to scape in a vicious sense, which is common in our elder language. See SCAPE.

Thousand escapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fantasies. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Loose escapes of love. Milton, P. R.

6. Oversight; mistake.

In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation. Brerewood on Languages.

ESCAPER. * n. s. [from escape.] One who gets out of danger.

Let none go forth nor escape out of the city, [in the margin, let no escaper go.] 2 Kings, ix. 15.

ESCAPING. * n. s. [from escape.] Avoidance of danger.

None escaped, [in the margin, there was not an escaping.] 2 Chron. xx. 24.

That there should be no remnant nor escaping. Ezra, ix. 14.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. s. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

TO ESCARP. * v. a. [Fr. escarper, from escarpe, the outward slope of the rampart.] To slope down. A military word.

The glacier was all escarped upon the live rock. Carleton's Mem. p. 132.

ESCHALOT. † n. s. [Fr. The eschalot is affirmed by some to have been originally brought from Ascalon.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlic; only they are to be set earlier and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the winter kills them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

ESCHAR. † n. s. [old Fr. escar; Gr. εσχάρα, scab; which some derive from xala, to burn; others, from the Latin scarificare, or excidere.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp, Surgery.

ESC

ESCHARO'TICK. † adj. [from eschar.] Caustick; having the power to sear or burn the flesh.

Now in respect to the virtues of cedar, besides that it heats and dries powerfully, it has likewise this particular and remarkable quality, that, after the nature of septic and escharotick medicines, it corrodes and consumes the flesh in a very short time, if applied to a living body.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 272.

ESCHARO'TICK. n. s. A caustick application.

An eschar was made by the cathartick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks.

• Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster.

Wise man, Surgery.

ESCHE'AT. † n. s. [old French eschent, from eschoir, and that perhaps from the Latin cadere, to fall.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, eschent is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superior lord, dies seised, without heir general or especial.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered.

Cowell.

To ESCH'AT. † v. n. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise eschented to her majesty.

Spenser on Ireland.

As the bishops cannot devise by will, all they die possessed of eschents to the king.

Swinburn, Trav. through Spain, p. 322.

To ESCH'AT. * v. a. To forfeit.

Infidelity cannot forfeit their inheritance to others; no more than enmity professed by Jews to Christian religion can eschent their goods to the crown under which they live.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited eschented lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion.

Clarendon.

ESCH'ATABLE. * adj. [Fr. eschable.] Liable to eschent.

Cotgrave.

ESCH'ATAGE. * n. s. [from eschent.] The right of succession to an eschent.

Sherwood.

ESCH'ATOR. n. s. [from eschent.] An officer that observes the eschents of the king in the county whereof he is eschator, and certifies them into the Exchequer.

Cowell.

At a Bartholomew fair at London an eschator of the city arrested a clothier, and seized his goods.

Camden, Rem.

To ESCH'w. † v. a. [eschoir, old French, Dr. Johnson says, which word has not the meaning of eschew; it is from the ancient Fr. word eschiver, to avoid; which was afterwards written eschever, and then eschuir. V. Roquef. Gloss. So Chaucer writes our word eschue.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed.

Sidney.

So let us, which this change of weather view,
Change eke our minds, and former lives amend;
The old year's sins forepast let us eschew,
And fly the faults with which we did offend.

Spenser.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;

A wise man knows both when and what to do.

Sandys.

ESC

Of virtue and vice, men are universally to practise the one and eschew the other.

Atterbury.

ESCO'CHEON. * n. s. [Fr.] The shield of the family. See ESCUTCHEON.

The addition of the escucheon of Edward the Confessor to his own, although used by the family of Norfolk for many years, and justified by the authority of the heralds, was a sufficient foundation for an impeachment of high treason.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 9.

ESCORT. n. s. [escort, Fr.] Convoy; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT. † v. a. [escorter, Fr.] To convey: to guard from place to place.

They were both escorted to the city of Canterbury.

Warton, Hist. E. Poet. i. Diss. 2.

ESCOT. n. s. [Fr.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

ESCO'UT. n. s. [escouter, Fr.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good escout abroad, and sure watch within.

Hayward.

ESCR'PT. * n. s. [Fr. escript.] A writing; a schedule.

Cockeran, and Bullock.

ESCRITOIRE. n. s. [Fr.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scri-tore.

ESCU'AGE. n. s. [from escu, Fr. a shield.] Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l.* per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that census equestis is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money, to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services.

Cowell.

ESCU'LIAN. * adj. [from Esculapius, the ancient physician.] Medical.

For what calls thy disease, Lorenzo? Not

For Esculapian but for morabaid.

Young, Night Th. 2.

ESCU'LENT. adj. [esculentus, Lat.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he snuffed on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick, Bacon.

ESCU'LENT. n. s. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make this root: the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ESCU'TCHEON. n. s. The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

Escutcheon is a French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the escutcheon. Bacon, Essays.

We will pass over the escutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESCU'TCHEONED.* adj. [from escutcheon.] Having an escutcheon or ensign.

For what, gay friend! is this escutcheon'd world,
Which hangs out Death in one eternal night?

Young, Night Th. 2.

To ESLO'IN.* v. a. [old Fr. esloigner.] To remove; to banish; to withdraw.

I'll tell thee now (dear love) what thou shalt do
To anger Destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay, though she eslougne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne, Poems, p. 23.

ESO'PIAN.* adj. [from Æsop.] Applied generally to fables and compilations like those which are attributed to Æsop.

He [Alex. Neckham] wrote a tract on the mythology of the ancient poets, Esopian fables, and a system of grammar and rhetoric. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 2.

ESOTERICK.* adj. [Lat. esotericus, inward.] Secret; mysterious. A term applied to the double doctrine of the ancient philosophers; the publick, or exoterick; the secret, or esoterick. The first was that which they openly professed and taught to the world; the latter was confined to a small number of chosen disciples. Chambers.

ESOTERY.* n. s. [Lat. esotericus.] Mystery; secrecy.

The ancients, delivering their lectures by word of mouth, could adapt their subjects to their audience, reserving their esoterics for adepts, and dealing out exoterics only to the vulgar. Note in Search's Freewill, p. 172.

ESPALIER.† n. s. [Fr. espallier.] A tree planted and cut so as to join others.

Plant your faire tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn, Kalendar.

Behold Villario's ten years' toil complete,
His arbores darken, his espaliers meet. Pope.

To ESPALIER.* v. a. To plant and cut trees so as to form espaliers. A term of modern gardening.

ESPA'RCET.. n. s. [medica, or trifolium, Lat.] A kind of saint-foin. A plant. Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [spécialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up. Daniel, Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly, in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

Shakespeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

ESPERANCE.† n. s. [Fr.] Hope. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Shakespeare. It deserves to be noticed, however, that this word was probably common. It is in the vocabularies of Cockram and Bullock; and has been adopted by the Scottish writer, Bellenden.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,

An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

ESPPAL.† n. s. [Fr. from espier.]

1. A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not now used, Dr. Johnson says. He means in the present sense; taking no notice of the second. In this meaning the word commenced with Chaucer, who writes it espaille. Bacon very often uses it; and Raleigh has employed it. Dr. Johnson has mistakenly introduced Spenser as using it for a spy; but he uses it for discovery, observation, or detection. See the second definition.

And in a night when Saul and his army were at rest, and that David, by an espial, knew they were all fast on sleepe; [he] took with him a certain of the most assured and valiant personages of his hoste. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 157.

As he march'd along,

By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops.

Shakespeare.

'Spials have informed me,

The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,

Went through a secret grate.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bacon, Hen. VII.

There is a kind of followers likewise, which is dangerous, being indeed espials; which enquire the secrets of the house, and bear tales of them to others. Bacon, Ess. 48.

The intelligences that princes study to attain, are procured by divers means; some are brought by report, some vented by conversation and sounding, some by means of espials.

Raleigh, Arts of Empire, ch. 25.

2. Observation; detection; discovery.

A man may, as it were, on a mountain or a place of espial, behold on every side far off.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 74. b.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times, as they shall have intelligence or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

After the espial of this boy [who had stolen several things, and confessed,] my lord revealed the same unto the council.

Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

ESPI'ER.* n. s. [old Fr. espieur.] One who watches like a spy.

Ye covetous misers—ye crafty espies of the necessity of your poor brethren to make your gain of their pain, your commodity of their calamity!

Harnar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. (1587), p. 175.

ESPINEL.* n. s. [Fr. espinelle.] A kind of ruby.

Cotgrave.

E S P

Here [at Pegu] is store of gold, silver, lead, and iron; amara, topazes, rubies, sapphires, garnets, emeralds, espinele, and cats-eyes. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 359.

ESPIONAGE.* n. s. [French.] In military language, the act of procuring and giving intelligence. It has, of late, been affectedly used by writers on other subjects.

ESPLANADE.† n. s. [Fr.]

1. In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterscarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

2. In modern gardening, a grass-plot.

ESPOUSAL.* n. s. [from To espouse.] Adoption; protection.

If political reasons forbid the open espousal of his cause, pity commands the assistance which private fortunes can lend him. Ld. Orford.

ESPOUSAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon, Hen. VII.

ESPOUSALS.† n. s. without a singular. [sponsilia, Lat. espousailles, Fr.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth; the love of thine espousals. Jerem. ii. 2.

Whether it is necessary or requisite there should be a witnessed contract, or espousals of the parties to be married, before the solemnization of the marriage?

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

When we came nearer this appearance who should it be but Monsieur Guardeloop, mine and Ramble's French taylor, attended by others, leading one of Madam Depingle's unids to the church, in order to their espousals. Tatler, No. 7.

To ESPOUSE. v. a. [espouser, Fr.]

1. To contract or betroth to another: with to.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me.

2 Sam. iiii. 14.

2. Or with.

He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman.

Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my empress,

And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse.

Tu. Andronicus.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,

Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed.

Milton, P. L.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd.

Who were before contracted in the mind.

Dryden.

If her sire approves,

Let him espouse her to the peer she loves.

Pope, Odys.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

5. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal deacent.

Dryden, Juv. Ded.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity.

Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be overbalanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it.

Smalridge.

The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it.

Atterbury.

E S Q

ESPOUSER.* n. s. [from espouse.] One who maintains or defends a point.

The espousers of that unauthorised and detestable scheme have been weak enough to assert, that there is a knowledge in the elect, peculiar to those chosen vessels.

Allen, Serm. before Univ. of Ox. 19 Jul. 1761, p. 11.

To ESPY'. v. a. [espier, Fr.]

1. To see things at a distance.

Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniences thereof work sensible smart. Hooker.

2. To discover a thing intended to be hid.

He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger.

Sidney.

3. To see unexpectedly.

As one of them opened his sack, he espied his money.

Gen. xlii. 27.

4. To discover as a spy.

Moses sent me to espy out the land, and I brought him word again.

Jos. xiv. 7.

To ESPY'. v. n. To watch; to look about.

Stand by the way and espy; ask him that feeth what is done?

Jer. xlvii. 19.

ESPY'.* n. s. [old Fr. espie.] A scout; a spy. Used by Gawen Douglas; and found in our old dictionaries by Huloet and Sherwood. Not now in use.

ESQUIRE.† n. s. [old Fr. escuier, from escu, a shield; Lat. scutum; Gr. σάκος. See SQUIRE.]

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

The hero in this distress was generally in armour, and in a readiness to fight any man he met with.—A lover of this kind had always about him a person of a second value, and subordinate to him.—This trusty companion was styled his esquire.

Tatler, No. 19.

It is somewhat difficult to account for the origin of the word esquire; which formerly signified a person bearing the arms of a nobleman or knight; and they were therefore called armigeri.

Guthrie, England.

2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgion, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superiour office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires.

Blount.

What, are our English dead?

Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The appellation of esquire is the most notoriously abused of any class amongst men.—I will undertake, that if you read the superscriptions to all the offices in the kingdom, you will not find three letters directed to any but esquires. I have myself a couple of clerks, and the rogues make nothing of leaving messages upon each other's desk: one directs to Degory Goosequill, esquire; to which the other replies by a note, to Nehemiah Dashwell, esquire, with respect! In a word, it is now "populus armigerorum," a people of esquires. Tatler, No. 19.

To ESQUIRE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To attend as an esquire; a colloquial expression, in the last century, denoting a gentleman attending a lady in publick; and of much the same value as the ridiculous chaperon of the present day.

To ESSAY. v. a. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial de've, divine assistance bring.
No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Popc.

Blackmore.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable.

Locke.

ESSAY.† n. s. [old Fr. essay, or essai; probably from the Latin examen.] The accent was formerly on either syllable; and some of our best poets placed it on the last. But it is now placed constantly on the first.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith.

2. A loose sally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current.

Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Roscommon.

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue.

Shakspeare.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

5. In metallurgy, the proof of the purity and value of metals. See SAY.

ESSAYER.* n. s. [Fr. essayeur.] One who writes essays.

A thought in which he hath been followed by all the essayers upon friendship, that have written since his time.

Addison, Spect. No. 68.

ESSAYIST.* n. s. [from essay.] A writer of essays.

I make, says a gentleman essayist of our author's age, as great difference between Tacitus and Seneca's style and his, [Cicero's] as musicians between Trenchmore and Lachrymæ.

B. Jonson, Masques.

Such are all the essayists, even their master Montaigne.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

In 1752 he [Johnson] was almost entirely occupied with his Dictionary. The last paper of his Rambler was published March 2, this year; after which, there was a cessation for some time of his talents as an essayist.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

ESSENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. essence; Lat. essentia.]

Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also.

Watts, Logick.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;

Another saith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part.

Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. More, Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2: Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

I would resign my essence, that he were

As happy as my love could fashion him.

Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences

Can perish.

Milton, P. L.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompound'd is their essence pure;
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb.

Milton, P. L.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,

If I be not by her fair influence

Poster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.

Shakspeare.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;

To save the powder from too rude a gale,

Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Popc, Rape of the Lock.

To ESSENCE.† v. a. [Fr. essencier.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced sopas and tawdry courtiers. Addison, Spect.

There of the fardel fop and essenc'd beau,

Ferocious, with a Stoic's frown disclose

Thy manly scorn, averse to tinsel pomp. Shenstone, Economy.

ESSENES.* n. s. [Lat. Esseni.] Of the etymology of this word numerous opinions have been formed. See Chambers in V. ESSENES.] Certain religious men, among the Jews, who lived a very strict life, abstaining from wine, flesh, and women. Bullockar.

An eminent critick thinks the first epistle to Timothy, and those to the Ephesians and Corinthians, were levelled against certain errors prevalent among them, which the Essenes (a Jewish sect) had borrowed from oriental philosophers.

Bp. Percy, Key to the New Test.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Sprat.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

ESS

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.

Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgement's more essential to a general,
Than courage.

Denham, Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilely elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption.

Arbutnot.

ESSENTIAL.† n. s.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential.

Milton, P. L.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials.

South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

In essentials and fundamentals they agree, holding one faith.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 113.

ESSENTIALITY.* n. s. [from essential.] Nature; first or constituent principles.

The French [are] a people, whose genius seems wholly turned to singing and dancing and prating, to vanity and impertinence; who lay so much weight upon modes and gestures; whose essentialities are generally so very superficial; who usually are so serious upon trifles, and so trifling upon what is serious.

Swift, Examiner, No. 32.

ESSENTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Latin.] By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant.

Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be, mortal.

South.

Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another.

Addison, Guardian.

To ESSENTIATE.* v. n. [from essence.] To become of the same essence.

'Tis an axiom in natural philosophy, What comes nearest the nature of that it feeds, converts quicker to nourishment, and doth sooner essentiate.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

ESSOIN. n. s. [of the French essoin, or exonni.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause; as sickness.

2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or sought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court-baron, upon just cause of absence.

Cowel.

3. Excuse; exemption.

From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise.

Spenser, F. Q.

To ESSOIN.* v. a. [old Fr. essoiner, from the Lat. exonero.] To excuse; to release.

Away, with wings of time; I'll not essoin thee;
Denounce these fiery judgements I enjoy thee.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620,) sign. G. 3.

ESSOINER.* n. s. [Fr. exoineur.] An attorney who sufficiently excuses the absence of another.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty.

Spenser on Ireland.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain.

Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment.

Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us.

Wake.

ESTAFET.* n. s. [Spanish, estafeta; French, estafier, which is now converted into estafette.] A military courier. Lye observes that our word, in his time, was quite new. So is the French. It is now usually written, in our military accounts, estafette; and means originally "a running foot-man."

EST

An estafette was dispatched on the part of our ministers at the Hague, requiring Marshal Bender to suspend his march.

Boothby on Burke, p. 84.

ESTA'TE. n. s. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written statc.

Many times the things adduced to judgement may be menm & tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people.

Bacon, Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She casts us headlong from our high estate.

Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them.

Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate.

Sidney.

Go, miser! go; for loose sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son!

Dryden, Pers.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties.

Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate.

Latimer.

Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee.

St. Mark, vi. 21.

To ESTATE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen

Summon'd me hither?

— A contract of true love to celebrate,

And some donation freely to estate

On the blest lovers.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Sir, I demand no more than your own offer,

And I will estate your daughter, in what I

Have promised.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

2. To establish; to fix.

Some of them thought that Christ descended to that place of Hades, where the souls of all the faithful from the death of the righteous Abel to the death of Christ were detained, and there, dissolving all the power by which they were detained below, translated them into a far more glorious place, and estate them in a condition far more happy in the heavens above.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

To ESTEEM. v. a. [estimer, French; estimo, Lat.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing,

The worth of all men by their end esteem,

And then due praise, or due reproach them yield.

Spenser.

A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not.

Hooker.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and estimated riches nothing in comparison of her.

Wisd. vii. 8.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,

And in her balance doth their values try.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less?

Dryden.

EST

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike.

Rom. xiv. 5.

To ESTEEM. v. n. To consider as to value: with of.

Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime.

Spenser.

ESTEEM.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,

Without esteem for virtuous poverty,

Severe Fabritius, or can cease t' admire

The ploughman consul in his coarse attire?

Dryden, Æn.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders.

Dryden, Pab. Pref.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me.

Pope.

2. Reckoning; estimate; account.

We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem

Was made much poorer by it.

Shakespeare, All's well.

ESTE'EMABLE.* adj. [Fr. estimable.] That may be esteemed.

To ESTIMATE. v. a. [estimo, Lat.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad; as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand.

Lev. xxvii. 14.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them.

Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

ESTIMATE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses.

Woodward.

2. Value.

EST

I'd love

My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's encrease,
The treasure of my loins. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgement.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison, Spect.

ESTIMAT'ION.† n. s. [Fr. estimation.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man should sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Levit.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgement.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.

Of your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakspeare, Cymb.

I know the gentleman

To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shakspeare.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wind. viii. 10.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

ESTIMATIVE.† adj. [from estimalc.]

1. Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetite or aversation, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.

2. Imaginative.

The honour I bear to this excellency in a wife moves me to rank her disposition, in the first place, as a jewel of that unvaluable richness, not estimative but intrinsic, that no other foil either of art or nature need be sought out to set this forth.

Sir C. Wandesforde, Instruct. to his Son, (about 1640.) § 83.

E'STIMATOR.† n. s. [Fr. estimeur.]

Cotgrave.

2. A settler of rates; a computist.

E'STIVAL.† adj. [estival, Fr. estival, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to the summer.

The trees were so placed, that their arms shot into one another, and were so closely interwoven, that the vernal and estival sunbeams could not pierce their rare embroidery.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 211.

2. Continuing for the summer.

Beside vernal, estival, and autumnal, made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 92.

To E'STIVATE.* v. n. [estiver, Fr. estival, Lat.]

Our word, with its derivatives, is also sometimes written estival. To pass the summer in a place.

Cockeram.

ESTIVAT'ION.† n. s. [estivatio, Latin.] A place in which to pass the time of summer.

Let it be turned to a grotto, or place of shade, or estivation.

Bacon, Ess. 45.

EST

ESTO'PEL. n. s. [law term.] Such an act as bars any legal process.

ESTO'PED.* adj. [law term.] Under an estoppel.

If the party be indicted by a wrong name, and plead to that indictment by that name, he shall not be received after to plead misnomer, for he is concluded and estopped by his plea by that name. Hale, H. P. C. P. ii. ch. 25.

ESTO'VERS.† n. s. [law term.] Necessaries allowed by law.

The Saxon word bote is of the same signification with the French estovers; and therefore house bote is a sufficient allowance of wood, to repair, or burn in, the house.

Blackstone.

ESTRA'DE. n. s. [French; stratum, Latin.] An even or level space. Dict.

To ESTRA'NGE.† v. a. [estranger, French.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.

Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.

See, she weeps;

Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrangle my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jer. xix. 4.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.

They are all estranged from me through their idols.

Ezek. xiv. 5.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,

That thou art thus estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me.

Shakspeare.

Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,

Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd.

Milton, P. L.

I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;

But little thought to find a mistress chang'd.

Dryden.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me.

Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.

They were not estranged from their lust. Psal. lxxviii. 30.

ESTRA'NGEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. estrangement.]

Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, — by a long estrangement, from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

One would be apt to suspect, the prevailing contempt of God's word, and estrangement from his house, to a degree that was never known in any Christian country, must take its rise from the irreligion and bad example of those who are styled the better sort.

Bp. Berkeley, Discourse addressed to Magistrates.

ESTRAPADE. n. s. [French.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehead is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs.

Barrier's Dict.

To ESTRA'Y.* v. n. [old Fr. estraier.] To stray; to wander.

This nymph one day, surcharg'd with love and grief,
Which commonly (the more the pity) dwell

As inmates both together, walking forth

With other maids to fish upon the shore;

Estrays apart, and leaves her company,

To entertain herself with her own thoughts.

Daniel, Hymen's Triumph.

EST

ESTRA'Y.* n. s. [from the verb.] A creature wandered beyond its limits; a stray.

Estray signifies any beast, not wild, found within any lordship, and not owned by any man; for in this case, it being cried, according to law, in the market towns adjoining, if it be not claimed by the owner in a year and a day, it is the lord's of the soil. Cowel.

ESTREAT. n. s. [extractum, Latin.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amer- cements or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowel.

To ESTRE'AT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To extract; to take from, by way of fine.

If, as divines tell us, the poor be God's receivers, then they seem to have a title as well by justice, as by charity, to the amer- cements that are estreated upon trespasses against their Lord. Boyle against Swearing, p. 112.

2. In law, to extract a copy of a writing.

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. s. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the re- version. Cowel.

E'STRICH.† n. s. [commonly written ostrich; Lat. struthiocamelus. Dr. Johnson very justly writes this word estrich; though he cites an example from Shakspeare, in which it is estridge; where indeed no cstrich or ostrich is intended, but a goshawk. Our estrich is the old Fr. austruche, rendered "an austridge or ostridge," by Cotgrave; and thus the corrupt spelling of estridge. The estridge or gos- hawk, according to Mr. Douce, is the barbarous Latin estricium; and he notices estrich-falcons in the Romance of Guy earl of Warwick. The con- text, in the passage of Shakspeare, evidently dis- claims the meaning of ostrich, and clearly alludes to the practice of flying falcons at pigeons.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shakspeare.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

E'STRIDGE.* See ESTRICH.

E'STUANCE. n. s. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his nilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalence, and regulated estuanee from wine. Brown.

E'STUARY.† n. s. [estuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

Among the solitary birds, which frequent the estuaries of rivers, the heron and the cormorant are of too much conse- quence to be overlooked. Gilpin.

Soon after which the river swells into a great estuary, and in sight forms the Bristol channel. Shrine, Tour of S. Wales.

To E'STUATE.† v. a. [astuo, Lat.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Cockeram.

And thus he often doth with the worst and vilest of men, whose lusts though they estuate and boil within, and are like the raging sea, raging and rolling in their hearts; yet God sets bounds to their proud waves.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 150.

ESTUA'TION n. s. [from astuo, Lat.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

ETC

Rivers and lakes, that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited unto estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible com- motion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

E'STURE. n. s. [astus, Lat.] Violence; commotion.
The seas retain

Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman, Odyssey.

E'SURIENT.† adj. [esuriens, Lat.] Hungry; vo- racious. Dict.

To the end that he might advance his esurient genie in an- tiquities. Life of A. Wood, (an. 1660,) p. 147.

E'SURINE. adj. [esurio, Lat.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead; in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wiseman.

ET CÆTERA.* [Latin.] A common expression in our language, denoting others of the like kind, or the rest, or so on.

Then a pretty Thomasine,
And then another Catharine,
And then a long et cætera. Cowley, Ballad.

[It] is indeed the self-same case
With those that swore et cæteras. Hudibras, i. ii.

I have by me an elaborate treatise on the apostrophe called an et cætera, it being a figure much used by some learned authors, particularly by the great Littleton, who, as my lord chief justice Coke observes, had a most admirable talent at an &c. Addison, Teller, No. 133.

Etc. A contraction of the two Latin words et cætera, which signifies and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will, by running over the stricken out lines with a stilt, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which, insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate; unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. To move forwards towards one side. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.]

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH.† n. s. A country word of which I know not the meaning, Dr. Johnson says. It is the same as eddish, which see; ground from which a crop has been taken.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer, Husbandry.

ETCHING.* n. s. [from the verb.] An impression of a copper-plate, taken after the manner described in the verb to etch.

E T E

ETE'OSTICK.* n. s. [Gr. ἔτος; and σῆλος.] A chronogrammatical composition.

Those hard trifles, anagrams,
Or eteosticks, or your finer flames
Of eggs and halberds.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

ETE'RNAL. adj. [æternus, Lat.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge.

Deuter. xxxiii. 27.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal.

Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fiancee lives.

— But in them nature's copy's not eternal.

Shakspeare.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off'rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine.

Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed.

Dryden.

ETERNAL.* n. s. [eternel, Fr.]

1. One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Etternal himself doth work.

Hooker.

By penitence the Etternal's wrath's appeas'd.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

The Etternal, to prevent such horrid fray,

Hung forth in heaven his golden scales.

Milton, P. L.

2. That which is endless and immortal.

All godlike passion for eternals quench'd.

Young.

ETE'RNALIST. n. s. [æternus, Lat.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this?

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

To ETE'RNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal.

Dict.

ETE'RNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case.

South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, ~~to~~ Bajaz's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride.

Addison.

ETE'RNEL.* adj. [old Fr. eternel.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The high Almighty purveiance,

In whose eternel remembrance

From first was every thing present.

Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

The dore was all of adamant eternel.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

We ought in all our haps rejoice,

Because the eye eternel all things foreseeth.

Mir. for Mag. p. 384.

The Cyclops' hammers fall

On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eternel.

Shakspeare.

To ETE'RNIFY.* v. a. [æternus and fio, Lat.] To make famous; to immortalize.

True Fame, the trumpeter of heaven that doth desire inflame
To glorious deeds, and by her power eternifies the name.

Mir. for Mag. p. 558.

ETE'RNITY.* n. s. [eternité, old Fr. eternitas, Lat.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root

Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out

Into eternity, and circular joys

Dancing an endless round, again shall rise.

Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme

Makes this one short point of time,

To fill up half the orb of round eternity.

Cowley.

E T H

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity.

Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,

Eternity, whose end no eye can reach!

Milton, P. L.

Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!

Through what variety of untried being,

Through what new scenes and changes must we pass!

Addison, Cato.

To ETE'RNIZE.* v. a. [old Fr. eternizer.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts

Created him endow'd; with happiness,

And immortality: that fondly lost,

This other serv'd but to eternize woe.

Milton, P. L.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings.

Sidney.

And well besseems all knights of noble name,

That covet in th' immortal book of fame

To be eternized, that same to haunt.

Spenser, F. Q.

I might relate of thousands, and their names

Eternize here on earth; but those elect

Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,

Seek not the praise of men.

Milton, P. L.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own.

Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable, Dr. Johnson says. In this respect he followed the authority of elder times; for so Niccols has accented the word in the Mirror for Magistrates, (1610,) p. 369. And Young has followed him. Yet Mr. Nares has asserted, in his Elements of Orthocopy, that the accent is regular on the second syllable of this word, and presumes that there is no exception.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove

Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love.

Creech, Manilius.

'Tis thine to raise and eternize the song.

Young, Night Th. 4.

ETE'SIAN.* adj. [Fr. etesien, Gr. ἔτησιος, annual.]

Applied to such winds as blow at stated times of the year, from what part soever of the compass they come; such as our seamen call monsoons and trade-winds. Cotgrave denominates them "the easterly winds which commonly blow in the dog-days."

ETHE.* adj. [Sax. eað.] Easy. See EATH.

A fool is ethe to beguile.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 3957.

E'THEL.* adj. [Sax. eðel.] Noble; whence Ethelbert, Ethelward, &c. See ATHEL.

ETHER. n. s. [æther, Latin; ἄῤῥῆρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtile than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force, by which those particles may recede from one another.

Newton, Opticks.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.

Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,

Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

E T H

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels inc, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Milton, P. L.
Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n, Ethereal virtues! Milton, P. L.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature;
a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHEREOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand. Milton, P. L.

ETHICAL.† adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; treating on morality.

It is no narrow and niggardly encomium to say he [Pope] is the great poet of reason, the first of ethical authors in verse.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

ETHICALLY. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christianly of the faults of the tongue. Gov. of the Tongue.

ETHICK. adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

ETHICKS. n. s. without the singular. [ἠθικά.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.

Persius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no proselytes from the Christian religion. Bentley.

ETHIOP.* n. s. Properly a native of Ethiopia; but long since adopted by us in the general sense of a blackamore. So in Latin æthiops. It is so given in Cockeram's old vocabulary. In the plural Ethiops.

Sylvia, (witness heaven, that made her fair!)

Shews Julia but a swartly Ethiop.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Since her time are colligrs counted bright;
And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

Shall praise —

Earn dirty bread by washing Ethiops fair? Young, Night Th. 4.

ETHIOPS-MINERAL.* See ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL.

ETHMOIDAL.* adj. [from ethmoides.] The denomination given to one of the sutures of the human cranium. Chambers.

ETHMOIDES.* n. s. [Greek, from ἠθμός, a sieve, and ἴδος, form.] The name of the bone situate in the middle of the basis of the forehead or os frontis, and at the top of the root of the nose; filling almost the whole cavity of the nostrils. Chambers.

ETHNICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἠθικός.] Heathen; Pagan.

Lest I might seem to have no measure in raking up this ethnical dunghill, I will now leave the theology of the original of demons. Made, Apostasy of the Lat. Times, (1641,) p. 19.

ETHNICISM.* n. s. [from ethnick.] Heathenism;
paganism.

A hallowed temple, free from taint
Of ethnicism makes his muse a saint. B. Jonson, Epigrams.

E T Y

ETHNICK. adj. [ἠθικός.] Heathen; Pagan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such contumely as the ethnick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated Christians.

Gov. of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the Sacred Writings. Grew.

ETHNICKS.† n. s. Heathens; not Jews; not Christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Ralegh, Hist.

First, it is to be observed, that although the Jews and Eth-nicks derided both the Apostles and the rest of the Christians, for preaching and believing in him who was crucified upon the cross; yet all, both Apostles and Christians, were so far from being discouraged from their profession by the ignominy of the cross, as they rather rejoiced and triumphed in it.

Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

ETHOLOGICAL.* adj. [ἠθολόγος and λόγος.] Treating of morality.

ETIOLOGY.† n. s. [ἠτιολογία.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper,
Dr. Johnson says; citing only the authority of Arbuthnot. But it was in use before Arbuthnot wrote, in a more general sense.

The fourth way of amplification is by frequent etiologies, or giving reasons for what we say.

Instructions for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 80.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper. Arbuthnot on An.

ETIQUE'TTE.* n. s. [French. Originally meaning a ticket or title affixed to papers; "to a lawyer's book-bag," says Cotgrave, "containing the titles of the books, and the names of them to whom they belong." Then it next signified an account of ceremonies in the courts of princes; and now the etiquette observed at a publick dinner or ball is, with us, of like importance. A word thus adjusting rank, and place, and dignity, might be supposed to be of great date among the ancient non-pareils of politeness, the French; but it is modern.
Richelet takes no notice of it, in this sense, in his Dictionary of 1685. Some derive the word from the Greek εἶκος, order.] Ceremony.

The Infanta Maria Josepha has reason to envy every country wench she sees roaming at liberty; for confinement, etiquette, and celibacy, are likely to be her lot during life.

Swinburn, Trav. through Spain, p. 358.

Without hesitation kiss the slipper, or whatever else the etiquette of that court requires. Ld. Chesterfield.

ETUI.* n. s. [French.] A case for tweezers and such instruments.

The gold etui

With all its bright inhabitants. Shenstone.

ETITLE.* v. n. [of uncertain etymology.] To intend. North of England. Ray, and Grose.

ETTIN.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology; though in Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary to eat has been offered, by Dr. Leyden, as the etymon. The word is adopted from the old romances. Dr. Jamieson seems not to have been aware that the word is used by English authors.] A giant.

They say the king of Portugal cannot sit at his meat, but the giants and the ettins will come and snatch it from him.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of the Burn. Pestle.

ETYMOLOGER.* n. s. [from etymology.] An etymologist; one who points out the derivation of words from their original.

Laws there must be; and "let à ligando," saith the etymologer: it is called a law from binding.

Dr. Griffith, Fear of God and the King, (1660,) p. 82.

ETYMOLOGICAL. † adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation. Locke.

It is sufficient, in etymological inquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea. Johnson.

ETYMOLOGICALLY. * adv. [from etymological.] According to etymology.

ETYMOLOGIST. † n. s. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

It may be, curious etymologists (let them lose their wages who work in difficult trifles) seek to reap what was never sown, whilst they study to make those words speak reason, which are only voces ad placitum, imposed at pleasure.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 168.

I close this section with an apology for Chaucer, Gower, and Oocleve; who are supposed by the severer etymologists, to have corrupted the purity of the English language.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 50.

To ETYMOLOGIZE. * v. a. [old French etymologizer; and our own word also is one of the oldest, though Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it.] To give the etymology of a word.

The first parte of this name we have yfounde,
Let us etymologize the secounde.

Chaucer, Rem. of Love, ver. 301.

Pha. Breeches, quasi bear-riches; when a gallant bears all his riches in his breeches.

Amo. Most fortunately etymologized!

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

A house is thus etymologized by Sextus Pompeius, "Ædes est domicilium in edito loco positum, &c."

Austin's Hec Homo, p. 57.

ETYMOLOGY. n. s. [etymologia, Lat. ἔτυμος and λόγος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colliquation of the body, which acceptance its etymology implies. Harvey on Consumption.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous. Collier, View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison, Spect.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts, Logick.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

ETYMON. † n. s. [ἔτυμον, Gr. etymon, Fr.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue. Beucham on Drawing.

The etymologist therefore, whoever he were, hath deceived himself in assigning the etymon of this word Assyria, while he forgeth this distinction between it and Syria.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 179.

To EVA'CATE. v. a. [evaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to evacuate them. Harvey on the Plague.

To EVA'CUATE. † v. a. [evacuo, Latin.] Our word was not considered as generally known in 1617; for Fulke then places it, among difficult words, in his explanation of terms in the Rhemish Testament.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. To throw out as noxious; or offensive.

Fasting and humiliation is a sovereign remedy to evacuate all spiritual distempers. South, Sermon ix. 341.

3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses. Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon, Hen. VII.

They rise again indeed to life, and so the first death is evacuated. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

The Holy Ghost then is described as a Person distinct from the Person of the Father, whose power he is, and distinct from the Person of the Apostle, in whom he worketh, and consequently neither of the Socinian figures can evacuate or enervate the Doctrine of his proper and peculiar Personality. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them. South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperor, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia. Swift.

To EVA'CUATE. * v. n. To let blood; to take away blood.

If the malady continue, it is not amiss to evacuate in a part in the forehead. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 403.

EVA'CUANT. n. s. [evacuans, Latin.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

EVA'CUATION. † n. s. [old Fr. evacuation.]

1. Such emissions as leave a vacancy; discharge.

Consider the vast evacuations of men that England hath had by assistances lent to foreign kingdoms. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Let their treasury should be exhausted by so frequent evacuations several means were contrived to supply and replenish them. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. ch. 19.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Popery hath not been able to re-establish itself in any place, after provision made against it by utter evacuation of all Romish ceremonies. Hooker.

3. The practice of emptying the body by physick.

The usual practice of physick among us, turns in a manner wholly upon evacuating, either by bleeding, vomit, or some purgation. Temple.

4. Discharges of the body by any vent natural or artificial.

5. A withdrawing from out of a place, sometimes by treaty, sometimes by necessity. A military expression.

EVA'CUATIVE. * adj. [Fr. evacuatif.] Purgative.

Cotgrave.

EVA'CUATOR. * n. s. [from evacuate.] One who makes void or annuls.

Take heed, be not too busy in imitating any Father in a dangerous expression, or in excusing the great evacuators of the Law. Hammond, Works, i. 175.

To EVA'DE. v. a. [evado, Latin.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people.

Shakespeare.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd.

Milton, P. L.

He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evad'st; how did'st thou dare

To break hell bounds?

Dryden, State of Innocence.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

My argument evidently overthrows all that he brings to evade the testimonies of the fathers.

Stillingfleet.

4. To escape as imperceptible or unconquerable, as too great or too subtle to be seized or subdued.

We have seen how a contingent event baffles man's knowledge, and evades his power.

South.

To EVA'DE. v. n.

1. To escape; to slip away. It is not now used with from.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, than into a providence to prevent.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Unarm'd they might

Have easily, as spirits, evaded swift

By quick contraction, offemove.

Milton, P. L.

2. To practise sophistry or evasions.

The ministers of God are not to evade or take refuge in any of these two forementioned ways.

South.

EVAGA'TION.† n. s. [evagation, old French; from evagor, Latin.] The act of wandering; excursion;
ramble; deviation.

I shall make a circle hither again; taking perchance both universities in my line homewards. You married men are deprived of these evagations.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1638), Rem. p. 579.

These long chains of lofty mountains, which run through whole continents east and west, serve to stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries.

Ray.

E'VAL.* adj. [Lat. ævum.] Respecting the duration of time.

Every one at all skilled in the Greek language knows, that αἰών, age, and αἰώνιος, eval, improperly everlasting, do not convey the ideas of a proper eternity.

Letter to the Abp. of Canterbury, (1791,) 4to p. 67.

EVANES'CENT.* n. s. [Lat. evanescent.] Disappearance; end of appearance. Dr. Johnson is fond of this word, though he has taken no notice of it in his Dictionary.

Like light transmitted from room to room, they lose their strength and splendour, and fade at last in total evanescence.

Rambler, No. 156.

The image of misery was perhaps originally suggested to some poet by the conduct of his patron, by the daily contemplation of splendour which he never must partake, by fruitless attempts to catch at interdicted happiness, and by the sudden evanescence of his reward when he thought his labours almost at an end.

Ibid. No. 163.

EVANES'CENT. adj. [evanescent, Latin.] Vanishing; imperceptible; lessening beyond the perception of the senses.

The canal grows still smaller and slenderer, so as that the evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ.

Arbutnot.

The difference between right and wrong, on some petty cases, is almost evanescent.

Wallaston.

The downy orchard, and the melting pulp
Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed
Of evanescent insects.

Thomson, Summer.

EVA'NGEL.* n. s. [old Fr. evangile, Gr. εὐαγγέλιον.
This is one of our oldest words.] The Gospel;
good tidings. See EVANGELY.

A Breton book, written with evangiles,
Was set, and on this book he swore.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

He charged her, as she would answer it before God's tribunal, to take care of Christ his evangel, and of suppressing the popish prelates who withstood the same.

Hampton Court Conference, (1603,) p. 81.

Surely much rather might the heavenly ministry of the evangel bind herself about with far more piercing beams of majesty and awe, by wanting the beggarly help of halings and ameracements in the use of her powerful keys.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Govern.

EVANGE'LICAL. adj. [evangelique, French; evangelicus,
Latin.]

1. Agreeable to Gospel; consonant to the Christian law revealed in the holy Gospel.

This distinction between moral goodness and evangelical perfection, ought to have been observed.

Atterbury.

God will indeed judge the world in righteousness; but 'tis by an evangelical, not a legal righteousness, and by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the judge of the world.

Atterbury.

2. Contained in the Gospel.

Those evangelical hymns they allow not to stand in our liturgy.

Hooker.

EVANGE'LICALLY.* adv. [from evangelical.] According to the revelation of the Gospel.

It appears that acts of saving grace are evangelically good,
and well-pleasing to God.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 432.

EVANGE'LICK.* adj. [Fr. evangelique.] Consonant to the doctrine of the Gospel.

Sworn to the laws of God and evangelick truth.

Milton, Econoclastes.

EVA'NGELISM. n. s. [from evangely.] The promulgation of the blessed Gospel.

Thus was this land saved from infidelity, through the apostolic and miraculous evangelism.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

EVA'NGELIST.† n. s. [evangeliste, old Fr. εὐαγγελιστῆς,
Gr.]

1. A writer of the history of our Lord Jesus.

Each of these early writers ascribe to the four evangelists by name their respective histories.

Addison.

2. A promulgator of the Christian laws.

Those to whom he first entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had instructions; and it were fit our new evangelists should show their authority.

Decay of Piety.

EVA'NGELISTARY.* n. s. [old Fr. evangelistaire; low
Lat. evangelistarium.] A selection from the gospels, to be read, as a lesson, in divine service.

The Saxons had—kept the day, as it seemeth by their evangelistary, where the rubrick to the gospel is, This the gospel for Childmas or Childermas day.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 119.

The critics complain that the evangelistaries and sectionaries have often transfused their readings into the other manuscripts.

Porson to Travis, p. 230.

To EVA'NGELIZE.† v. a. [evangeliser, Fr. evangelizo, Lat. εὐαγγελίζω, Gr. It is placed by Fulke, in 1617, among words not then generally understood. Pref. to Rhem. Test. But it was in use before that time.] To instruct in the Gospel, or law of Jesus.

Angels' renowne, and men's evangeliz'd.

Davies, Witten Pilgrimage, L. 2.

None can be a better evangelist than the beloved physician, and none so complete a physician, as he who is frequently conversant in the Word of God; and able to evangelize.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 256.

The spirit

Pour'd first on his apostles, whom he sends
To evangelize the nations; then, on all
Baptiz'd, shall them with wonderous gifts endue.

Milton, P. L.

E V A

EVA'NGELY.† n. s. [εὐαγγέλιον, that is, good tidings. See EVANGEL. Evangelically is coeval with evangel, being used by Wicliffe.] Good tidings; the message of pardon and salvation; the holy Gospel; the Gospel of Jesus.

The whole evangelize of Christe.

Confutation of N. Shanton, (1546,) sign. H. iiii.

Good Lucius,

That first receiv'd Christianity,

The sacred pledge of Christ's evangelically.

Spenser, F. Q.

EYA'NID. adj. [evanidus, Lat.] Faint; weak; evanescent.

Where there is heat and strength enough in the plant to make the leaves odorate, there the smell of the flower is rather evanid and weaker than that of the leaves. Bacon.

The decoctions of simples, which bear the visible colours of bodies decocted, are dead and evanid, without the commixtion of allum, argol, and the like. Brown.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an evanid meteor. Glanville.

To EVA'NISH.† v. n. [evanesco, Lat.] Not a verb active, as Dr. Johnson gives it, (without any proof,) but neuter.] To vanish; to escape from notice or perception.

Riches being momentary and evanishing.

Drummond, Works, p. 222.

[They] wonder at the tale
Of horrid apparition, tall and ghastly,
That walks at dead of night, or takes his stand
O'er some new-open'd grave; and, strange to tell!

Evanesces at crowing of the cock.

Blair's Grave.

EVA'PORABLE. adj. [from evaporate.] Easily dissipated in fumes or vapours.

Such cordial powders as are aromattick, their virtue lies in parts that are of themselves volatile, and easily evaporable.

Grew.

To EVA'PORATE. v. n. [evaporo, Lat.] To fly away in vapours or fumes; to waste insensibly as a volatile spirit.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate. Denham.

Our works unhappily evaporated into words; we should have talked less, and done more. Decay of Piety.

Being weary with attending the slow consumption of the liquor, we set it in a digesting furnace to evaporate more nimbly.

Boyle on Saltpetre.

This vapour falling upon joints which have not heat enough to dispel it, cannot be cured otherwise than by burning, by which it evaporates.

Temple.

The enemy takes a surer way to consume us, by letting our courage evaporate against stones and rubbish.

Swift.

To EVA'PORATE.† v. a.

1. To drive away in fumes; to disperse in vapours.

Hast thou afforded us no means to evaporate these smokes, to withdraw these vapours?

Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 304.

If we compute that prodigious mass of water daily thrown into the sea from all the rivers, we should then know how much is perpetually evaporated, and cast again upon the continents to supply those innumerable streams.

Bentley.

Convents abroad are so many retreats for the speculative, the melancholy, the proud, the silent, the politick, and the morose, to spend themselves, and evaporate the noxious particles.

Swift.

We perceive clearly that fire will warm or burn us, and will evaporate water.

Watts, Logick.

2. To give vent to; to let out in ebullition or sallies.

My lord of Essex evaporated his thoughts in a sonnet to be sung before the queen.

Wotton.

EVA'PORATE.* adj. Dispersed in vapour.

How still the breeze! save what the filmy threads

Of dew evaporate brushes from the plain. Thomson, Autumn.

EVAPORATION.† n. s. [old Fr. evaporation.]

E U C

1. The act of flying away in fumes or vapours; vent; discharge.

They are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit.

Howell, Voc. Forest.

Evaporations are at some times greater, according to the greater heat of the sun; so wherever they alight again in rain, tis superiour in quantity to the rain of colder seasons.

Woodward.

2. The act of attenuating matter, so as to make it fume away.

Those waters, by rarefaction and evaporation, ascended.

Raleigh.

3. [In pharmacy.] An operation by which liquids are spent or driven away in steams, so as to leave some part stronger, or of a higher consistence than before.

Quincy.

EVA'SION. n. s. [evasum, Lat.] Excuse; subterfuge; sophistry; artifice; artful means of eluding or escaping.

We are too well acquainted with those answers;

But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,

Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Shakespeare.

Him, after all disputes,

Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,

And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still

But to my own conviction.

Milton, P. L.

In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame;

Thou by evasions thy crime uncover'st more.

Milton, S. A.

EVA'SIVE.† adj. [from evade.]

1. Practising evasion; elusive.

Thus he, though conscious of th' ethereal guest,

Answer'd evasive of the sly request.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Containing an evasion; sophistical; dishonestly artful.

Evasive arts will, it is feared, prevail, so long as distilled spirits of any kind are allowed.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 107.

EVA'SIVELY.† adv. [from evasive.] By evasion; elusively; sophistically.

I answered evasively, or at least indeterminately.

Bryant.

EUCHARIST. n. s. [ευχαριστία, Gr.] The act of giving thanks; the sacramental act in which the death of our Redeemer is commemorated with a thankful remembrance; the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Himself did better like of common bread to be used in the eucharist.

Hooker.

Some receive the sacrament as a means to procure great graces and blessings, others as an eucharist and an office of thanksgiving for what they have received.

Taylor.

EUCHARISTICAL.† adj. [from eucharist. Fr. eucharistique. See EUCHARISTICK.]

1. Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The latter part was eucharistical, which began at the breaking and blessing of the bread.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

It would not be amiss to put it into the eucharistical part of our daily devotions: we praise thee, O God, for our limbs and senses.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

The act of this eucharistical supper.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 294.

EUCHARISTICK.* adj. [Fr. eucharistique.] Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

The eucharistick bread being neither hypostatically united with the Divinity, nor being the medium through which any such supernatural tendency of the Divine Presence appears to us, adoration directed toward it cannot fail of being palpable idolatry.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

EUCHO'LOGY.† n. s. [euchologe, old Fr. ευχολόγιον, Gr. from ευχη, prayer, and λόγος, discourse.] A formulary of prayers.

E V E

He did not frame an entirely new prayer, in words of his own conception, but took out of the ancient euchologies, or prayer-books of the Jews, what was good and laudable in them.

Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 556.

EU'CHYMY.* n. s. [εὐχμία, Gr. of eu, good, and χμός, juice.] In medicine, a good temper of the blood, and other juices in the body.

EU'CRASY.† n. s. [εὐκρασία, Gr. from eu, good, and κράσις, temperature.] An agreeable well proportioned mixture of qualities, whereby a body is said to be in a good state of health. Quincy.

The eucrasie or good temperature of the body.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 34.

EUDIO'METER.* n. s. [Fr. eudiometre; modern in that as well as our own language; from the Gr. εὐδιος, serene, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument of modern invention to determine the salubrity of the air. The experiments of Dr. Priestley are said to have suggested the invention, and the Abbé Fontana has been called the inventor.

EVE'CTION.* n. s. [old Fr. evectio. Our word is metaphorically used in the sense of the Lat. evaho, to lift up.] Exaltation.

His [Joseph's] being taken out of the dungeon represented Christ's resurrection, as his evectio to the power of Egypt next to Pharaoh, signified the session of Christ at the right hand of the Father. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

EVE.† } n. s. [even, Sax. awend, or awond, Dutch; E'VEN. } ibn, Goth. all meaning equal; and thus denoting what Dr. Johnson terms "the interval," or equal division, "between bright light and darkness." The word even, although Dr. Johnson deduces all his illustrations of this sense from the poets, is not exclusively a poetical term.]

1. The close of the day; the latter part of the day; the interval between bright light and darkness.

At even the quails came up, and covered the camp; and in the morning the dew lay round about the host.

Exod. xvi. 13.

They, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument. Shakspeare.

When the sun's orb both even and morn is bright,
Then let no fear of storms thy mind affright. May, Virgil.

Such sights as youthful poets dream
On Summer even by haunted stream. Milton, L' Allegro.

O, nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still. Milton, Sonnet.

Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
What the late ev'n, or early morn prepares. Dryden, Virgil.

Winter, oft at eve, resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale morn. Thomson, Spring.

2. The vigil or fast to be observed before an holiday. In this sense only eve is used, not even. Dr. Johnson says; which, however, is a mistake. He cites Bishop Duppa, in proof of eve; and he might have found repeated usage of even in our Common Prayer Book, where the collect for the great vigil of our Saviour's resurrection bears the title of Easter Even.

A table of the vigils, &c. The evens or vigils before the Nativity of our Lord, the Purification, &c.

Tables, Pref. to the Book of Common Prayer.

Let the immediate preceding day be kept as the eve to this great feast. Duppa, Rule to Devotion.

EVEN.† adj. [even, Sax. even, Dutch; ibn, Goth. iafn, Icel. equal; æquis, Lat. Our word was originally used to denote the same rank or situation; as by Wicliffe: "his even servant fell down, and prayed him," i. e. fellow servant. St. Matt. xviii. So Chaucer calls a fellow Christian "an even Christian." The same expression is common in our old books, and was not wholly disused in Shakspeare's time: One of his clowns, in Hamlet, employs it. It is not now, in this sense, used.]

1. Level; not rugged; not unequal; smooth as opposed to rough.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,

Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden, Pers.

The present face of Rome is much more even and level than it was formerly. Addison on Italy.

The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, how shallow soever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton, Opticks.

2. Uniform; equal to itself.

Constancy is natural to persons of even tempers and uniform dispositions. Tatler, No. 192.

Lay the rough paths of peevish nature ev'n,

And open in each heart a little heav'n. Prior.

3. Level with; parallel to.

That the net may be even to the midst of the altar. Exod.

And shall lay thee even with the ground. St. Luke, xix. 44.

4. Not having inclination any way; not leaning to any side.

He was

A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even. Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. Not having any part higher or lower than the other.

When Alexander demanded of one what was the fittest seat of his empire, he laid a dry hide before him, and desired him to set his foot on one side thereof; which being done, all the other parts of the hide did rise up; but when he did set his foot in the middle, all the other parts lay flat and even. Davies.

6. Equal on both sides; fair; not favouring either.

Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand

On even ground against his mortal foe. Milton.

7. Without any thing owed, either good or ill; out of debt.

We reckon with your several loves,

And make us even with you;

Henceforth be eurs. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I will be even with thee, doubt it not. Shakspeare.

I do confess

The blind lad's pow'r, whilst he inhabits there;

But I'll be ev'n with him nevertheless. Suckling.

In taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy, but in passing it over, he is superiour. Bacon, Essays.

Even reckoning makes lasting friends; and the way to make reckonings even is to make them often. South.

The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them: the contempt is reciprocal. Addison.

The true reason of this strange doctrine was to be even with the magistrate, who was against them; and they resolved at any rate, to be against him. Atterbury.

8. Calm; not subject to elevation or depression; not uncertain.

Do not stain

The even virtue of our enterprise. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Desires compos'd, affections ever ev'n.

Tears that delight, and sighs that wait to heav'n. Pope.

9. Capable to be divided into equal parts; not odd.

Let him tell me whether the number of the stars be even or odd. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd, ascribing the odd unto the right side, and even unto the left. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO E'VEN.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make even.

E V E

With the ships, the number is even'd.

Stanhurst, Virg. Æn. b. i. (1582.)

Remove prejudice, even the balance, and hold it even.

Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. iii. § 86.

2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully repaid.

Nothing can, or shall content my soul,

Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. To level; to make level.

This temple Xerxes evened with the soil, which Alexander is said to have repaired. Raleigh, Hist.

Beat, roll, and mow carpet-walks and cammome; for now the ground is supple, and it will even all inequalities. Evelyn.

- To EVEN. v. n. To be equal to. Now disused.

A like strange observation taketh place here as at Stonehenge, that a redoubled numbering never eveneth with the first. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

EVEN, adv. [often contracted to ev'n.]

1. A word of strong assertion; verily.

Even so did those Gauls possess the coasts.

Spenser on Ireland.

Thou wast a soldier

Even to Cato's wish; not fierce, and terrible Only in strokes. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Dang'rous rocks,

Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,

Would scatter all the spices on the streain,

And, in a word, yea even now worth this,

And now worth nothing.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

It is not much that the good man ventures; after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery.

Tillotson.

He might even as well have employed his time, as some princes have done, in catching moles. Atterbury.

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.

All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden.

3. Likewise; not only so, but also.

The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others.

Holder.

Here all their rage, and ev'n a their murmurs cease, And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.

Pope.

4. So much as.

Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift.

5. A word of exaggeration in which a secret comparison is implied: as, even the great, that is, the great like the mean.

Nor death itself can wholly wash your stains,

But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains. Dryden.

I have made several discoveries, which appear new, even to those who are versed in critical learning. Addison, Spect.

6. A term of concession.

Since you refined the notion, and corrected the malignity, I shall ev'n let it pass. Collier of Friendship.

- To EVE, v. n. [Lat. evenio.] To happen; to come to pass.

How often and frequently doth it even, that after the love of God hath gained the dominion and upper-hand in the soul of man, that he is resolved to live well and religiously; in a small time after, do his lusts and evil concupiscence rally up themselves, and make a fresh assault more violent than the former! Hewyt, Sermon. (1658,) p. 83.

- EVENER, n. s.* [from even.] One that reconciles or makes even. An ancient and certainly useful word.

Hail, *even*er of old and new,

Hail, builder bold of Christ's hour!

Hymn to the Virgin, MS. cited by Warton, H. E. P. i. 315.

E V E

- EVENHAND, n. s.* [even and hand.] Parity of rank or degree.

Whoso is out of hope to attain to another's virtue, will seek to come at even-hand by depressing another's fortune. Bacon.

- EVENHANDED, adj.* [even and hand.] Impartial; equitable.

Evenhanded justice

Returns th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice

To our own lips.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- EVENING, n. s.* [æfen, Saxon; avend, Dutch.]

1. The close of the day; the beginning of night.

I shall fall

Like a bright exhalation in the evening,

And no man see me more.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The devil is now more laborious than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end. Raleigh, Hist.

It was a sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts on the Mind.

2. The latter end of life.

He was a person of great courage, honour, and fidelity, and not well known till his evening.

Ld. Clarendon, of the E. of Northampton.

- EVENING, n. s.* adj. Being toward the close of the day.

Let my prayer be as the evening sacrifice.

Psalms cxli. 2.

It shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light.

Zech. xiv. 7.

- EVENING-STAR, n. s.* The Vesper, or Hesperus, of the ancients.

The amorous bird of night

Sung spousal, and hid haste the evening-star

On his hill top to light the bridal lamp.

Milton, P. L.

Mean time the sun descended from the skies,

And the bright evening-star began to rise.

Dryden, Æn.

- EVENLY, adv.* [from even.]

1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.

In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed; no particles could convene by mutual attraction; for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions.

Bentley.

2. Levelly; without asperities.

A palish clearness, evenly and smoothly spread; not over-thin and washy, but of a pretty solid consistence. Wotton.

3. Without inclination to either side; in a posture parallel to the horizon; horizontally.

The upper face of the sea is known to be level by nature, and evenly distant from the centre, and waxes deeper and deeper the farther one saileth from the shore. Brerewood.

4. Impartially; without favour or enmity.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince: it behoves you to carry yourself wisely and evenly between them both. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

- EVENNESS, n. s.* [from even.]

1. State of being even.

Her feet were placed upon a cube, to shew stability, and in her lap she held a perpendicular or level, as the ensign of evenness and rest. B. Jonson, Part of the King's Entertain.

2. Uniformity; regularity.

The ether most readily yieldeth to the revolutions of the celestial bodies, and the making them with that evenness and celerity is requisite in them all. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Equality of surface; levelness.

4. Freedom from inclination to either side.

A crooked stick is not straitned, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself the length in a middle estate of evenness between both. Hooker.

5. Impartiality; equal respect.

6. Calmness; freedom from perturbation; equanimity. More imperious and impatient of contradiction than becomes the calmness, and unpassionate evenness of the true philosophical spirit. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 33.

Though he appeared to relish these blessings as much as any man, yet he bore the loss of them, when it happened, with great composure and evenness of mind. Atterbury.

E V E

EVENSONG. n. s. [even and song.]

1. The form of worship used in the evening.

Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among,

I woo, to hear thy evensong.

Milton, Il Pens.

If a man were but of a day's life, it is well if he lasts till evensong, and then says his complime an hour before the time.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. The evening; the close of the day.

He tun'd his notes both evensong and morn.

Dryden.

E'VENTIDE. n. s. [even and tide.] The time of evening.

A swarm of gnats at eventide,

Out of the fens of Allan do arise,

Their murmuring small trumpets sounding wide. Spenser, F. Q.

Isaac went out to meditate at eventide. Gen. xxiv. 63.

EVENT. n. s. [eventus, Latin.]

1. An incident; any thing that happens, good or bad.

There is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked.

Ecc. ix. 2.

Oh heavy times, begetting such events. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. The consequence of an action; the conclusion; the upshot.

Two spears from Melcager's hand were sent,

With equal force, but various in th' event;

The first was fixt in earth, the second stood

On the boar's bristled back, and deeply drank his blood.

Dryden.

TO E'VE'NT.* v. n. [old French eventer, to burst forth.

This word is perhaps peculiar to Ben Jonson. It is now obsolete.] To break forth.

O that thou saw'st my heart, or didst behold

The place from whence that scalding sigh evented.

B. Jonson, Case is altered.

TO E'VE'NTERATE.† v. a. [eventrer, old French; eventero, Latin.] To rip up; to open by ripping the belly.

In a bear, which the hunters eventerated, or opened, I beheld the young ones, with all their parts distinct. Brown.

E'VE'NTFUL. adj. [event and full.], Full of incidents; full of changes of fortune.

Last scene of all,

That ends this strange eventful history,

Is second childlessness.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow

The poet's bays and critick's ivy grow,

Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,

As next in place to Mantua, next in fame.

Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;

And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Philips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakspeare.

I know a lord who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dis sever

From the fair head, for ever and for ever.

Pope.

5. For ever. For the term of life.

His master shall bore his ear through with an aul, and he shall serve him for ever. Exod. xxi. 6.

6. At one time, as, ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,

Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;

And ever and anon, with rosy red,

The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Spenser, F. Q.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L' Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,

And ever and anon a silent tear

Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard.

Dryden.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier on Pride.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man:

And all the question, wrangle er so long,

Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong?

Pope, Essays.

8. A word of enforcement, or aggravation. As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

E V E

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Dan. iv. 24.

That purse in your hand, as a twin brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden, Span. Friar.

As soon as e'er the bird is dead, Opening again, he lays his claim To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainer of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.

9. Ever a. Any: [as ever y, i. e. even ich, or ever each, is each one, all. See EVERY.] This expression is still retained in the Scottish dialects.

I am old, I am old.

—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

10. It is often contracted into e'er.

11. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everduring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast, That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

EVERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length, That to the house of heavenly gods it raught; And with extorted power and borrow'd strength, The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser, F. Q.

Torture without end Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed With everburning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton, P. L.

EVERDURING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide Her everduring gates, harmonious sound! On golden hinges moving. Milton, P. L.

EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him A monument, and plant it round with shade Of laurel evergreen, and branching palm. Milton, S. A.

The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EVERGREEN. n. s. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn.

I and you are against filling an English garden with evergreens. Addison, Spect.

EVERHONOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.

Mentea, an everhonour'd name, of old High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope, Odyssey.

EVERLASTING. adj. [ever and lasting.]

1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal; eternal.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not; Therefore our everlasting farewell take: For ever, and for ever, farewell Cassius. Shakespeare.

The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.

And what a trifle is a moment's breath, Laid in the scale with everlasting death! Denham.

E V E

2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.

EVERLASTING.† n. s.

1. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future. From everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Ps. xc. 2. We are in God through the knowledge which is had of us, and the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.

2. The Eternal Being.

O, that this too too solid flesh would melt, Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew! Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd His canon 'gainst self-slaughter. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

EVERLASTING-PEA. n. s.* [lathyrus.] A flower.

Witness the everlasting-pease and scarlet-bean.

EVERLASTINGNESS.† n. s. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

He hath called us to everlastingness.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565) fol. 39. b.

O Lord, Thou that dwellest in everlastingness.

2 Esdras, viii. 10.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,

That the world had an everlastingness,

Than to consider that a year is run

Since both this lower world's, and the sun's sun,

Did set.

Dante, Poems, p. 223.

A perpetuity (as I may so say) that is circumscribed; an everlastingness that lasts as long, as the thing of which it is affirmed. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 191.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right To that most glorious house, that glist'reth bright With burning stars and everliving fires? Spenser, F. Q.

In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Raleigh, Hist.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving Agent. Newton, Opticks.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally.

More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,

Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Spenser, F. Q.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,

Which makes them now to such a highness flee. Davies.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

EVEROPEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to all our words. Hp. Taylor.

EVE'RTION.* n. s. [old French, eversion; Lat. eversio.] Overthrow. Cockeram.

Supposing overturnings of their old error to be the eversion of their well-established governments. Bp. Taylor, Cases of Con.

To EVE'RT. † v. a. [old Fr. evertir; Lat. everso.]

Heylin, in 1656, reckons the word as new and uncouth; but it had been used by a good author thirty years before that time, and had appeared in our lexicography of nearly the same date; as in Cockeram's vocabulary.] To destroy; to overthrow.

I shall say nothing so consonant unto reason, which (by the conceit of a strange reason) he will not seek to evert; yea, and take a pride too in it. Fotherby, Atheom. (1626.) p. 5.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everted and overthrown. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EVERWA'TCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.

Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope, Odyssey.

EVERY. † adj. [in old language everich, that is, ever each; æpep ealc, Saxon. Everyche one, for every one, is in the old vocabulary of Huloet; and is common in the elder language of Gower and Chaucer. Wicliffe uses ever either, for both, Acts, viii.]

1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He proposeth unto God their necessities, and they their own requests for relief in every of them. Hooker.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them. Numbers, xvi.

The king made this ordonance, that every twelve years there should be set forth two ships. Bacon, New Atlantis.

The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond on Fundam.

Aristotle has long since observed how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Every one, that has any idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from ev'ry cloud. Pope, Statius.

2. Every where. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not every-where seen, nor did it every-where suffer death; every-where it could not be entombed; it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven. Hooker.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is every-where so in fashion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

EVERYDAY.* adj. Common; occurring on any day.

This was no everyday writer. Pope, of Akenside, in Johnson's Life of Akenside.

EVESDROPPER. n. s. [eaves and dropper.] Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night, to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evesdropper. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Do but think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an evesdropper, under the women's windows. Dryden, Don Sebast.

To EVE'STIGATE. v. a. [evestigo, Lat.] To search out.

Dict.

EVER.* See EET

E V I

EUGE.* n. s. [Latin.] Commendation; applause; gratulation.

The musick that Pythagoras talks of in the orbs, was that of the minstrels which our Saviour mentions at the return of that prodigal, to solemnize the euges, the passionate welcomes of Heaven poured out on penitents. Hammond, Works, iv. 500.

His actions being such as his best and purest reason approves, have the cheerful euges and applauses of his conscience continually echoing and resounding after them. Scott, Works, ii. 28.

EUGH. n. s. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original is, Saxon, or Welsh ywen, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the first stretch of both his hands, he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh. Dryden, Aen.

To EVI'GATE.* v. a. [Lat. evibro.] To shake; to brandish. Cockeram.

To EVICT. † v. a. [evincto, Latin.]

1. To dispossess of by a judicial course.

The law of England would speedily evict them out of their possession, and therefore they held it the best policy to cast off the yoke of English law. Davies on Ireland.

2. To take away by a sentence of law.

His lands were evicted from him. K. James's Declaration.

I suffered myself to be over-intreated to abate somewhat of that evicted composition. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

3. To prove; to evince. Little used.

I do not desire to be equal to those that went before; but to have my reason examined with theirs, and so much faith to be given them, or me, as those shall evict.

This nervous fluid has never been discovered in live animals by the senses, however assisted; nor its necessity evicted by any cogent experiment. B. Jonson, Discoveries. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

EVICTI'ON. † n. s. [old Fr. eviction.]

1. Dispossession or deprivation by a definitive sentence of a court of judicature.

If any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party doth cautiously get the start at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things, and no respect had to eviction or dispossession. Bacon.

To him it is properly an eviction by the just sentence of God, who thus puts him out of a trust that he abused to the hurt of them, for whose sakes it was given him.

Bp. Lloyd on God's Disp. of Kingdoms, P. i. (1691), p. 67.

2. Proof; evidence; certain testimony.

These, these are excellent and irrefragable proofs and evictions of your calling and election. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 285.

A plurality of voices carries the question in all our debates, but rather as an expedient for peace than an eviction of the right. L' Estrange.

EVIDENCE. n. s. [French.]

1. The state of being evident; clearness; indubitable certainty; notoriety.

2. Testimony; proof.

I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch. Jeremiah, xxxii. 16.

Unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof and evidence for every thing which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Cato Major, who had borne all the great offices, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was versed in country affairs. Locke.

They bear evidence to a history in defence of Christianity, the truth of which history was their motive to embrace Christianity. Addison on the Christian Religion.

3. Witness; one that gives evidence. In this sense it is sometimes plural; as, the evidence were sworn: but sometimes regularly augmented, as, evidences.

To swear he saw three inches through a door, As Asiatick evidences swore. Dryden, Juv.

There are books extant, which they must needs allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason. Bentley.

To EVIDENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prove; to evince.

The horses must be evidenced by good testimonies to have been bred in Ireland. Temple.

These things the Christian religion require, as might be evidenced from texts. Tillotson.

2. To shew; to make discovery of.

Thou on earth had'st prosper'd, which thy looks

Now also evidence. Milton, P. L.

Although the same truths be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

EVIDENT. adj. [French.] Plain; apparent; notorious.

It is evident, in the general frame of nature, that things most manifest unto sense have proved obscure unto the understanding. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They are incapable of making conquests upon their neighbours, which is evident to all that know their constitutions. Temple.

Children minded not what was said, when it was evident to them that no attention was sufficient. Locke.

EVIDENTIAL. adj. [from evident.] Affording evidence or proof.

If it might be allowed me, I would fain distinguish all miracles into providential and evidential ones: Those should be evidential ones, which God enables men to work in order to gain belief, and which they know beforehand, they shall work: These are such miracles as Moses and our Saviour wrought, and other prophets, and such as we have all along been speaking of. Bp. Fleetwood, Essay on Miracles, p. 229.

EVIDENTLY. adv. [from evident.] Apparently; certainly; undeniably.

Laying their eggs, they evidently prove The genial pow'r and full effects of love. Prior.

The printing private letters is the worst sort of betraying conversation, as it has evidently the most extensive ill consequences. Pope.

EVIGILATION. n. s. [Lat. evigilatio.] A waking.

The evigilation of the animal powers, when Adam awoke. Biblioth. Biblica, (Oxf. 1720,) i. 157.

EVIL. † adj. [ȝfel, Saxon; ewel, Dutch; ubils, Goth. So the etymologists in general. But "from the Hebrew gu-v-l comes the English word evil," says Harris, in his Pref. to Remarks on the 53. chapter of Isaiah, (1739,) p. 34.]

1. Having bad qualities of any kind; not good.

He hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin. Deut. xxii. 14.

The accuser complains, the witness evinced, the judge sentences. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

E'VINCI'BLE. adj. [from evince.] Capable of proof; demonstrable.

Implanted instincts in brutes are in themselves highly reasonable and useful to their ends, and evincible by true reason to be such. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

E'VINCI'BL.Y. adv. [from evincible.] In such a manner as to force conviction.

To E'VIRATE.† v. a. [eviratus, Latin.] To deprive of manhood; to emasculate. Cockeram.

Not to speak of Origen, and some others that have voluntarily evirated themselves. Bp. Hall, Christ. Mod. B. i. § 4.

E'VIRA'TION.* n. s. [Latin, eviratio.] * Castration. Cockeram.

To E'VISCERATE.† v. a. [eviscero, Latin.] To embowel; to draw; to deprive of the entrails; to search within the entrails. Bullockar, and Cockeram.

They did, spider-like, eviscerate and spin out themselves and their time. Dr. Griffiths, Samar. Reviv'd, (1660.) p. 36.

These take great pains, and eviscerate themselves, as it were, to weave a web, which, when it is ended, is fit for no other use but as an unprofitable thing to be swept away.

Citation in Richard's Observ. (1696.) p. 70.

E'VITABLE. adj. [evitabilis, Latin.] Avoidable; that may be escaped or shunned.

Of divers things evil, all being not evitable, we take one; which one, saving only in case of so great urgency, were not otherwise to be taken. Hooker.

EUN

To E'VITATE. v. a. [evito, Latin.] To avoid; to shun; to escape.

Therein she doth evitate and shun
A thousand irreligious cursed hours,
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

E'VITA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. evitation.] The act of avoiding.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union and evitation, of solution of continuity. Bacon.

To E'VITE.* v. a. [old Fr. eviter, Lat. evito.] To avoid.

Gainst open shame no text can well be cited,
The blow once given cannot be evited. Drayton.

The terrors are no way to be evited, &c.
Ld. President Forbes, Reflex. on Incredulity, (1750.) p. 81.

E'VITE'RNAL. adj. [eviternus, Lat.] Eternal in a limited sense; of duration not infinitely but indefinitely long.

E'VITE'RNITY. n. s. [eviternitas, low Lat.] Duration not infinitely, but indefinitely long.

E'ULO'GICAL.* adv. [from eulogy.] Commendatory; containing praise.

E'ULO'GICALLY.* adv. In a manner which conveys encomium or praise.

Give me leave eulogically to enumerate a few of those many attributes, which have deservedly been given that glorious planet. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 387.

To E'U'LOGIZE.* v. a. [from eulogy.] To commend; to praise. A word of recent introduction into our language.

Those
Who eulogize their country's foes. Huddesford, Satir. Poems.
A young clergyman of the east self-eulogized as evangelical rose. Dean of Middleham (in 1813.) Norris's Pract. Expos.

E'U'LOGY.† n. s. [old Fr. euloge, from the Gr. eu, well, and lógos, discourse. Formerly used in the sense of benediction; and so eulogy is defined in some of our old vocabularies. Thus the French eulogies denote consecrated things, as the consecrated bread of the Greek church. See also ΕΥΛΟΓΙΑΙ in Meursii Gloss. Græco-Barbarum.] Praise; encomium; panegyrick.

Many brave young minds have oftentimes, through hearing the praises and famous eulogies of worthy men, being stirred up to affect the like commendations. Spenser on Ireland.

If some men's appetites find more melody in discord, than in the harmony of the angelic quires; yet even these seldom miss to be affected with eulogies given themselves.

Decay of Piety.

E'U'NUCH. n. s. [εὐνεχῶ, Gr.] One that is castrated or emasculated.

He hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also disighted. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd awhile to doat
On nonsense garg'd in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.

To E'U'NUCH.* v. a. To make an eunuch.

They eunuch all their priests; from whence 'tis shewn,
That they deserve no children of their own. Creech, Lucretius.

To E'U'NUCHATE. v. a. To make an eunuch.

It were an impossible act to eunuchate or castrate themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'U'NUCHISM.* n. s. [from eunuch.] The state of an eunuch.

That evanescence, not in itself, but for the kingdom of heaven, is better than it, we doubt not; but when these two are reduced to their subjects, their value is according to their use.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Mar. Clergy, p. 54.

This voluntary evanescence is not to be understood literally, as it was by Origen.

Tests of Papists concern. Celibacy exam. P. ii. 782.

EVOCATION. n. s. [evocatio, Latin.] The act of calling out.

Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscence evocation. Brown.

Instead of a descent into hell, it seems rather a conjuring up or an evocation of the dead from hell. Notes to Odyssey.

To EVOKE.* v. a. [Lat. evoco.] To call forth.

This verb is in Cockeram's old vocabulary, but I have not found it in use till a century after it.

I had no sooner evoked the name of Shakspeare from the rotten monument of his former editions, than a crew of strange devils, and more grotesque than any of those he laughs at in the old farces, began chattering, mewing, and grinning round about me. Warburton to Hurd, (1749.) Lett. 6.

The only business and use of this character, is to open the subject in a long prologue, to evoke the devil, and summon the court. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 362.

EVOLATION.† n. s. [evolo, Latin.] The act of flying away.

That spiritual substance, which is imprisoned within us, would fain be flying up to that heaven whence it descended; these walls of flesh forbid that evolution, (as Socrates called it of old,) and will not let it out, till the God of Spirits (who placed it there) shall unlock the doors and free the prisoner by death. Bp. Hall, Freer Prisoner, § 7.

To EVO'LTE.† v. a. [evolver, old French; evolvero, Latin.] To unfold; to disentangle.

The animal soul sooner expands and evolves itself to its full orb and extent than the human soul. Hale.

This little active principle, as the body increaseth and dilateth, evolureth, diffuseth, and expandeth, if not his substantial existence, yet his energy. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

With frequent steps I visit yonder seat
Of man, thy offspring; from the tender seeds
Of justice, and of wisdom, to evolve
The latent honours of his generous name.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

To EVO'LTE. v. n. To open itself; to disclose itself.

Ambrosial odour
Does round the air evolving scents diffuse;
The holy ground is wet with heav'nly dews.

Prior.

EVOLUTION. n. s. [evolutus, Latin.]

1. The act of unrolling or unfolding.

The spontaneous coagulation of the little saline bodies was preceded by almost innumerable evolutions, which were so various, that the little bodies came to obvert to each other those parts by which they might be best fastened together. Boyle.

2. The series of things unrolled or unfolded.

The whole evolution of ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is so collectedly and presentifically represented to God at once, as if all things which ever were, are, or shall be, were at this very instant really present. More, Divine Dialogues.

3. [In geometry.] The equable evolution of the periphery of a circle, or any other curve, is such a gradual approach of the circumference to rectitude, as that all its parts do meet together, and equally evolve or unbend; so that the same line becomes successively a less arch of a reciprocally greater circle, till at last they turn into a strait line. Harris.

4. [In tactics.] The motion made by a body of men in changing their posture, or form of drawing up.

And these evolutions are doubling of ranks or files, countermarches, and wheelings. Harris.

5. EVOLUTION of Powers. [in algebra.] Extracting of roots from any given power, being the reverse of involution. Harris.

EVOMITION.† n. s. [evomo, Latin.] The act of vomiting out. Dict.

He was — to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

EUONYMUS.* n. s. [Lat.] In botany, a shrub, common in our hedges, called also spindle-tree.

The euonymus, of which the best skewers are made, is called prickwood. Monck Mason, Notes on Shakspeare.

EUPATHY.* n. s. [Gr. εὐπαθία.] A right feeling.

In Laetius we read recorded for a Stoick sentiment, that as the virtuous man had his εὐαίτια, or perturbations; so, opposed to these, had the virtuous his εὐπαθία, his eupathies or well-feelings, translated by Cicero constantia. The three chief of these were Will, defined rational desire; Caution, defined rational aversion; and Joy, defined rational exultation. To these three principal eupathies belonged many subordinate species. Harris's Three Treaties, Note on Treat. III.

EUPATORY. n. s. [eupatorium.] A plant.

EUPHEMISM.* n. s. [Gr. εὐφημισμός, from εὖ, well, and φημι, to speak.] In rhetoric, a way of describing an offensive thing by an inoffensive expression.

EUPHONICAL. adj. [from euphony.] Sounding agreeably. Dict.

EUPHONY.† n. s. [εὐφωνία.] An agreeable sound; the contrary to harshness.

Had the Grecians been as careless of euphony and polishing their words in the terminations, as they have been in the initial syllables, their language had been as much inferior to some others in euphony, as now it is esteemed more pleasant and graceful. Dalgarno, Didascal. (Ox. 1680.) 114.

In verse there is more care of euphony in every part.

Instruct. for Oratory, (Ox. 1682.) p. 138.

EUPHORBBIUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A plant.

It hath flowers and fruit like the spurge, and is also full of an hot sharp milky juice. The plants are angular, and shaped somewhat like the cereus or torch-thistle. It is commonly beset with spines, and for the most part hath no leaves. Miller.

2. A gum resin, brought to us always in drops or grains of a bright yellow, between a straw and a gold colour, and a smooth glossy surface. It has no great smell, but its taste is violently acrid and nauseous. It is used medicinally in sinapisms. Will.

EUPHRASY. n. s. [euprasia, Latin.] The herb eyebright; a plant supposed to clear the sight.

Then purg'd with euphrasy, and rue,
The visual nerve; for he had much to see;

And from the well of life three drops instill'd. Milton, P. L.

EURIPUS.* n. s. [Latin.] Any strait, where the water is in much agitation; from the ancient frith between Boeotia and Euboea, called Euripus.

They have ordained, that the provision of this establishment might be as stable as the earth on which it stands, and should not fluctuate with the euripus of funds and actions. Burke.

EUROCLYDON. n. s. [ευροκλύδων.] A wind which blows between the East and North, and is very dangerous in the Mediterranean. It is of the nature of a whirlwind, which falls suddenly on ships, makes them tack about, and sometimes causes them to founder, as Pliny observes. Calmet.

There arose against it a tempestuous wind called eurocydon. Acts, xxvii. 14.

EUROPE'AN. adj. [europæus, Latin.] Belonging to Europe.

Mean while the Spaniards in America,
Near to the line the sun approaching saw,
And hop'd their European coast to find Clear'd from our ships by the autumnal wind. Waller.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms? Dryden, Æn.
He alone defy'd

The European thrones combin'd, and still Had set at nought their machinations vain. Philips.

EURUS. n. s. [Latin.] The East wind.

Eurus, as all other winds, must be drawn with blown cheeks, wings upon his shoulders, and his body the colour of the tawny moon. Peacham.

EURYTHMY. n. s. [εὐρυθμία.] Harmony; regular and symmetrical measure.

From these three ideas or designs, viz. orthography, scenography, and profile, it is that eurythmy, "majestica" and "venusta species ædificii," do result. Evelyn on Architecture.

EUSEBIAN. n. s. An Arian; so called, on account of the favour which Eusebius, bishop of Cesarea, shewed the Arians at their rise.

My good friend Mr. Pierce — heard that I was become an heretical Eusebian or Arian; so he wrote me the following letter, in the way of a true friend and a good scholar, but a zealous Athanasian. Whiston, Mem. p. 139.

EU'STYLE. n. s. [from εὖ, well, and σῦλος, a column, Gr.] In architecture, the position of columns in an edifice at a most convenient and graceful distance, one from another.

EUTHANASIA. n. s. [εὐθανασία.] An easy death.

Let me prescribe and commend to thee, my son, this true spiritual means of thine happy euthanasia, which can be no other than this faithful disposition of the labouring soul, that can truly say, I know whom I have believed.

Bp. Hall, The Comforter.

I ask not to live, O Hebe! give me but gentle death; euthanasia, euthanasia, that is all I implore. Tatler, No. 44.

A recovery, in my case, and at my age, is impossible: the kindest wish of my friends is euthanasia. Arbuthnot.

Our life cannot be pronounced happy, till the last scene is closed with ease and resignation: the mind still continuing to preserve its usual dignity, and falling into the arms of death, as a wearied traveller sinks into rest. This is that euthanasia which Augustus often desired, which Antoninus Pius enjoyed, and for which every wise man will pray.

Orrery on Swift, p. 165.

EUTY'CHIAN. n. s. One of those ancient hereticks, who denied the two natures of our Lord Christ; so called from Eutyches, abbot of a monastery at Constantinople in the fifth century.

To this an Eutychian might have answered.

Burnet on the 39 Articles, Art. 28.

Those very passages — we have urged, from the arguments of the Fathers, against the Eutychians. Ibid.

EUTY'CHIAN. adj. Denoting the ancient hereticks called Eutychians.

The Eutychian hereticks fancied the human nature of Christ to be swallowed up of his divinity. Tillotson, Sermon. xlv.

TO EVUL'GATE. v. u. [Lat. evulgo.] To publish; to spread abroad.

EVULGATION. n. s. [evulgo, Lat.] The act of divulging publication. Dict.

E X A

EVULSION. n. s. [evulsion, old French; evulsio, Latin.] The act of plucking out.

From a strict enquiry we cannot maintain the evulsion, or biting off any parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EWE. n. s. [eoep, Sax.] The she-sheep; the female to the ram.

Rams have more wreathed horns than ewes. Bacon.

Haste the sacrifice;

Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd, for Phœbus chuse;
And for Diana seven unspotted ewes. Dryden, Æn.

E'WER. n. s. [from eau, perhaps anciently ey, water, Dr. Johnson says. The old French ewe is certainly water; so is the Saxon eye. The Norm. Fr. eyer is our ever.] A vessel in which water is brought for washing the hands.

I dreamt of a silver bason and ever to-night. Shakespeare.

Let one attend him with a silver bason

Full of rosewater, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ever; a third a diaper;

And say, wilt please your lordship cool your hands?

Shakespeare.

The golden ever a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool, translucent springs;

With copious water the bright vase supplies

A silver laver, of capacious size:

They wash.

Pope, Odyssey.

E'WRV. n. s. [from ever.] An office in the king's household, where they take care of the linen for the king's table, lay the cloth, and serve up water in silver ewers after dinner. Dict.

EX. n. s. A Latin preposition often prefixed to compounded words; sometimes meaning out, as exhaust, to draw out; sometimes only enforcing the meaning, and sometimes producing little alteration. It is also often prefixed to words, in order to imply out, i. e. no longer in office or employment; as, an ex-chancellor, an ex-general, an ex-minister.

TO EXACERBATE. v. a. [exacerbo, Lat.] To imbitter; to exasperate; to heighten any malignant quality.

EXACERBATION. n. s. [old Fr. exacerbation.]

1. Increase of malignity; augmented force or severity.

2. Height of a disease; paroxysm.

The patient may strive, by little and little, to overcome the symptom in exacerbation; and so, by time, turn suffering into nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Watchfulness and delirium, and exacerbation, every other day. Arbuthnot on Dict.

EXACERVA'TION. n. s. [accervus, Lat.] The act of heaping up. Dict.

EXA'CT. adj. [exactus, Lat.]

1. Nice; not failing; not deviating from rule.

All this, exact to rule, were brought about,

Were but in a combat in the lists left out. Pope.

2. Methodical; not negligently performed.

What if you and I enquire how money matters stand between us? — With all my heart, I love exact dealing; and let Hocus audit. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

3. Careful; not negligent: of persons.

Many gentlemen turn out of the seats of their ancestors, to make way for such new masters as have been more exact in their accounts than themselves. Spectator.

4. Honest; strict; punctual.

In my doings I was exact.

Ecclus. li. 19.

TO EXA'CT. v. a. [old Fr. exacter, from exigo, exactus, Lat.]

1. To require authoritatively.

Thou now exact'st the penalty,

Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh. Shakespeare.

Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it again; but that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand shall release. Deut. xv. 3.
Exact of servants to be faithful and diligent. Bp. Taylor.
 From us his foes pronounc'd glory he exacts. Milton, P. L.
 The hand of fate is over us, and Heaven Exacts severity from all our thoughts. Addison, Cato.

2. To demand of right.

Years of service past,
 From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden,
 Where they design a recompence for benefits received, they are less solicitous to make it when it is exacted. Smalridge.

3. To summon, to enjoin; to enforce.

*Let us descend now therefore from this top
 Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting hence. Milton, P. L.

Duty,
 And justice to my father's soul, exact
 This cruel piety. Denham, Sophy.

To EXACT. v. n. To practise extortion.

The enemy shall not exact upon him. Psaln lxxx. 22.

EXACTER.† n. s. [from exact; old Fr. exacteur. Often written extitor. See EXACTOR.]

1. An extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

The poller and exacter of fees justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon, Essays.

I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exacters righteousness. Isaiah, lx. 17.

2. He that demands by authority.

Light and lewd persons, especially that the exacter of the oath did neither use exhortation, nor examining of them for taking thereof, were easily suborned to make an affidavit for money. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or his demands.

No men are prone to be greater tyrants, and more rigorous exacters upon others, than such whose pride was formerly least disposed to the obedience of lawful constitutions. King Charles.

The grateful person being still the most severe exacter of himself, not only confesses, but proclaims his debts. South.

There is no way to deal with this man of reason, this rigid exacter of strict demonstration for things which are not capable of it. Tillotson.

EXACTION.† n. s. [old Fr. exaction.]

1. The act of making an authoritative demand, or levying by force.

We would leave the seventh year, and the exaction of every debt. Nehem. x. 31.

If he should break his day, what should I gain
 By the exaction of the forfeiture? Shakspeare.

2. Extortion; unjust demand.

They vent reproaches
 Most bitterly on you, for putter-on
 Of these exactions. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Remove violence and spoil, and execute judgement and justice; take away your exactions from my people. Ezek. xlv. 9.

As the first earl did first raise the greatness of that house, by Irish exactions and oppressions; so Gerald the last earl did at last ruin it by the like extortions. Davies on Ireland.

3. A tribute severely levied.

They have not made bridges over the rivers for the convenience of their subjects as well as strangers, who pay an unreasonable exaction at every ferry upon the least using of the waters. Addison on Italy.

EXACTITUDE.* n. s. [from exact.] Exactness; nicety. Scott.

Every sentence, every word, every syllable, every letter and point, seem to have been weighed with the nicest exactitude. Grades, Prosp. p. 92.

EXACTLY. adv. [from exact.] Accurately; nicely; thoroughly.

Both of 'em knew mankind exactly well; for both of 'em began that study in themselves. Dryden, Don Sebast.

The religion they profess is such, that the more exactly it is sifted by pure unbiassed reason, the more reasonable still it will be found. Atterbury.

EXACTNESS.† n. s. [from exact.]

1. Accuracy; nicety; strict conformity to rule or symmetry.

Of exactness of balance and weights. Ecclesi. xlii. 4.
Exactness, even to the partition of a cummin seed. Hammond, Works, iv. 546.

The experiments were all made with the utmost exactness and circumspection. Woodward on Fossils.

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
 Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
 'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
 But the joint force and full result of all. Pope.

The balance must be held by a third hand, who is to deal power with the utmost exactness into the several scales. Swift.

2. Regularity of conduct; strictness of manners; care not to deviate.

I preferred not the outward peace of my kingdoms with men, before that inward exactness of conscience before God. King Charles.

They think that their exactness in one duty will atone for their neglect of another. Rogers.

EXACTOR.* n. s. [from exact.]

1. An extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

Dispensers against the laws of God, but tyrannous importunators and exactors of their own. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

The service of sin is perfect slavery; and he who will pay obedience to the commands of it, shall find it an unreasonable task-master, and an unmeasurable exactor. South, Sermon, ii. 27.

2. He that demands by authority.

As they reposed great religion in an oath, in respect of the actor: so did they likewise, in respect of the exactor. Fotherby, Altheim, p. 42.

After which, innumerable forms and shapes of new exactions and exactors overspread the land. Milton, Eiconoclastes.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or demands.

Men that are in health are severe exactors of patience at the hands of them that are sick. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 3.

He was so severe an exactor of gravity and reverence in all mention of religion, that he could never endure any light or profane word, with what sharpness of wit soever it was covered. I. d. Clarendon of R. Ch. I. b. ii.

It is doubtless a great disgrace to our religion to imagine, as too many superstitious Christians do, that it is an enemy to mirth and cheerfulness, and a severe exactor of pensive looks and solemn faces. Scott, Christ, Life, i. 4.

EXACTRESS.* n. s. [from exactor.] She who is severe in her injunctions.

That were a heavy and hard task, to satisfy Expectation, who is so severe an exactress of duties; ever a tyrannous mistress; and most times a pressing enemy. B. Jonson, Masques.

To EXACUATE.* v. a. [Lat. exacuo.] To whet; to sharpen. Cockeram.

He hath done you wrong, in a most high degree;
 And sense of such an injury receiv'd
 Should so exacuate and whet your choler,
 As you should count yourself an host of men,
 Compar'd to him. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

EXACUATION.* n. s. [from exacuate.] The act of whetting or sharpening. *Cockeram.*To EXAGGERATE. v. a. [exaggero, Lat.]

1. To heap upon; to accumulate.

In the great level near Thorny, several oaks and firs stand in firm earth below the moor, and have lain there hundreds of

of years, still covered by the fresh and salt waters and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

2. To heighten by representation; to enlarge by hyperbolical expressions.

He had exaggerated, as pathetically as he could, the sense the people generally had, even despair of ever seeing an end of the calamities. Clarendon.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison, Spect.

EXAGGERA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. exaggeration.]

1. The act of heaping together; an heap; an accumulation.

Some towns, that were anciently havens and ports, are now, by exaggeration of sand between these towns and the sea, converted into firm land. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Hyperbolical amplification.

The vulgar sort of people are verie little benefitted by these prolix and long-winded discourses, or expostulations, or exaggerations, rather than prayers. Featley, Dippers dipt. p. 124.

Exaggerations of the prodigious condescensions in the prince to pass good laws, would have an odd sound at Westminster. Swift.

EXAGGERATORY.* adj. [from exaggerate.] Enlarging by hyperbolical expressions.

Dear princess, said Rasselas, you fall into the common errors of exaggeratory declamation, by producing, in a familiar disquisition, examples of national calamities, and scenes of extensive misery, which are found in books rather than in the world. Johnson, Rasselas, ch. 28.

To EXAGITATE. † v. a. [exagito, Lat.]

1. To shake; to put in motion.

The warm air of the bed exagitates the blood. Arbutnot.

2. To reprove; to pursue with invectives. This sense is now disused, being purely Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but a learned prelate of his own time thought it a proper expression, after the example of Hooker; to be retained.

Hence Aristophanes in such a free manner exagitates the mysterious solemnities, the horrible secrets attending them, and impudent figures.

Bp. Lavington, Enthus. of Methodists, &c. (1751,) P. iii. p. 330.

This their defect and imperfection, I had rather lament in such case than exagitate. Hooker.

EXAGITA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. exagitation.] The act of shaking, or agitating. Dict.

To EXALT. v. a. [exalter, French; allus, Latin; exalto, low Latin.]

1. To raise on high.

And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell. St. Matt. xi. 23.

2. To elevate to power, wealth, or dignity.

Exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

Ezek. xxi. 26.

As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go? Ezod. ix. 17.

How long shall mine enemy be exalted over me? Ps. xiii. 2.

3. To elevate to joy or confidence.

The covenanters who understood their own want of strength, were very reasonably exalted with this success. Clarendon.

How much soever the king's friends were dejected upon the passing those two acts, it is certain, they who thought they got whatsoever he lost were mightily exalted, and thought themselves now superior to any opposition. Dryden, Æn. Ded.

4. To praise; to extol; to magnify.

O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. Psal. xxxiv. 3.

5. To raise up in opposition: a scriptural phrase.

Against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lift up thine eyes on high? 2 Kings, xix. 22.

6. To intend; to enforce.

Now Mars, she said, let flame exalt her voice; Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

E X A

7. To heighten; to improve; to refine by fire, as in chymistry.

The wild animals have more exercise, have their juices more elaborated and exalted; but for the same reason the fibres are harder. Arbutnot on Aliments.

With chymick art exalts the min'ral pow'rs,

And draws the aromatick souls of flow'rs. Pope.

They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities. Watts.

8. To elevate in diction or sentiment.

But hear, oh hear, in what exalted strains,
Sicilian muses, through these happy plains,
Proclaim Saturnian times, our own Apollo reigns. Rowcommon.

EXALTA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. exaltation.]

1. The act of raising on high.

2. Elevation to power, dignity, or excellence.

She put off the garments of widowhood, for the exaltation of those that were oppressed. Judith, xvi. 8.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed an exaltation of that which was humbled: for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

3. Elevated state; state of greatness or dignity.

I wonder'd at my flight and change

To this high exaltation. Milton, P. L.

In God all perfections, in their highest degree and exaltation, meet together. Tillotson.

You are as much esteemed, and as much beloved, perhaps more dreaded, than ever you were in your highest exaltation. Swift.

4. [In pharmacy.] Raising a medicine to a higher degree of virtue, or an increase of the most remarkable property of any body. Quincy.

5. [In physicks.] The operation of purifying or perfecting any natural body, its principles, or parts.

The second of these, viz. sanguification, is performed, when the chyle itself is ground over again, and receiving yet farther exaltations by a greater solution of the more noble and active principles. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 107.

6. Dignity of a planet in which its powers are increased.

Astrologers tell us, that the sun receives his exaltation in the sign Aries. Dryden.

EXALTEDNESS.* n. s. [from exalted.]

1. State of dignity or greatness.

That the angels and saints should, upon the account of the exaltedness of their natures, see and hear from thence what is done or said from one side of the earth to the other, is extremely incredible. Morc, Antid. against Idolotry, ch. 2.

2. Conceited greatness.

The exaltedness of some minds, or rather as I shrewdly suspect their insipidity and want of feeling and observation, may make them insensible to these light things. Gray to West, Lett. 6.

EXAL'TER.* n. s. [from exalt.]

1. One that raises on high.

Thus her, doubtful of her way,
For game and not for hunger a sea-pie
Spied through this traitorous spectacle, from high,
The seely fish where it disputing lay,
And to end her doubts, and her, bears her away;
Exalted she's, but to the exalter's good,
(As are, by great ones, men which lowly stood.)
It's rais'd to be the raiser's instrument and food.

Donne, Poems, p. 303.

2. One that highly praises or extols.

The Jesuits are the great exalters of the pope's supremacy. Puller, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 479.

EXA'MEN. † n. s. [Lat.] Examination; disquisition; enquiry.

E X A

This considered together with a strict account, and critical examen of reason, will also distract the witty determinations of astrology.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The pure and useful religion needs not fear the most severe examen.

Worthington to Hartlib, (1660,) Ep. 4.

After so fair an examen, wherein nothing has been exaggerated.

Burke, Vindic. of Nat. Society.

EXAMINABLE.* adj. [from examine.] Proper to be enquired into.

EXAMINANT.* n. s. [Lat. examinans.] One who is to be examined.

• The examiners shall examine two at a time—the examinants shall appear before them, in classes of six at a time.

Dean Prideaux on the Ref. of the Two Univ. (1715,) Life, &c. p. 234.

EXAMINATE. n. s. [examinatus, Lat.] The person examined.

In an examination where a freed servant, who having power with Claudius, very saucily had almost all the words, asked in scorn one of the examinates, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus; I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? He answered, I would have stood behind his chair and held my peace.

Bacon.

EXAMINATION. n. s. [examinatio, Lat.] The act of examining by questions, or experiment; accurate disquisition.

I have brought him forth, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

Acts, xxv. 26.

Different men leaving out or putting in several simple ideas, according to their various examination, skill, or observation of the subject, have different essences.

Locke.

EXAMINATOR.† n. s. [Lat.] An examiner; an enquirer.

An inference, not of power to persuade a serious examinator.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

All other inferior magistrates to be chosen as the literati in China, or by those exact suffrages of the Venetians, and such again be not eligible, or capable of magistracies, honours, offices, except they be sufficiently qualified for learning, manners, and that by the strict approbation of deputed examinators.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

To EXAMINE.† v. a. [examine, Lat.]

1. To try a person accused or suspected by interrogatories.

Let them examine themselves whether they repent them truly.

Church Catechism.

If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man.

Acts, iv. 9.

We ought, before it be too late, to examine our souls, and provide for futurity.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. To interrogate a witness.

Command his accusers to come unto thee, by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things.

Acts, xxiv. 8.

3. To question; to doubt.

All her deserving
Is a reserved honesty, and that
I have not heard examined.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

4. To try the truth or falsehood of any proposition.

5. To try by experiment, or observation; narrowly sift; scan.

To write what may securely stand the test
Of being well read over thrice at least,
Compare each phrase, examine ev'ry line,
Weigh ev'ry word, and ev'ry thought refine.

Pope.

6. To make enquiry into; to search into; to scrutinise.

When I began to examine the extent and certainty of our knowledge, I found it had a near connexion with words.

Locke.

EXAMINER.† n. s. [from examine.]

1. One who interrogates a criminal or evidence.

E X A

A crafty clerk, commissioner, or examiner, will make a witness speak what he truly never meant.

Hale, Law of England.

2. One who searches or tries any thing; one who scrutinizes.

Hulot.

So much diligence is not altogether necessary, but it will promote the success of the experiments, and by a very scrupulous examiner of things deserves to be applied.

Newton, Opticks.

Such only, as shall obtain a certificate of approbation from the two examiners that examined them, shall be qualified for the said degree.

Dean Prideaux, &c. Life, p. 235.

EXAMPLARY. adj. [from example.] Serving for example or pattern; proposed to imitation.

We are not of opinion that nature, in working, hath before her certain exemplary draughts or patterns, which subsisting in the bosom of the Highest, and being thence discovered, she fixeth her eye upon them.

Hooker.

EXAMPLE. n. s. [example, Fr. exemplum, Lat.]

1. Copy or pattern; that which is proposed to be resembled or imitated.

The example and pattern of those his creatures he beheld in all eternity.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. Precedent; former instance of the like.

So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,

Such temp'rate order in so fierce a course,
Doth want example.

Shakespeare, K. John.

3. Precedent of good.

Let us shew an example to our brethren.

Judith, viii. 24.

Taught this by his example, whom I now

Acknowledge my Redeemer ever blest!

Milton, P. L.

4. A person fit to be proposed as a pattern.

Be thou an example of the believers.

1 Tim. iv. 12.

5. One punished for the admonition of others.

Sodom and Gomorrah, giving themselves over to fornication, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

Jude, 7.

6. Influence which disposes to imitation.

When virtue is present, men take example at it; and when it is gone, they desire it.

Wisd. iv. 2.

Example is a motive of a very prevailing force on the actions of men.

Rogers.

7. Instance; illustration of a general position by some particular specification.

Can we, for example, give the praise of valour to a man, who, seeing his gods prophaned, should want the courage to defend them?

Dryden, Virg. Æn. Ded.

8. Instance in which a rule is illustrated by an application.

My reason is sufficiently convinced both of the truth and usefulness of his precepts: it is to pretend that I have, at least in some places, made examples to his rules.

Dryden.

To EXAMPLE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To exemplify; to give an instance of.

The proof whereof I saw sufficiently exemplified in these late wars of Munster.

Spenser on Ireland.

Men of blemished persons may contain a wise, valiant, learned, liberal, and religious soul, and be in every part most absolute; exemplified to us in many famous men.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 80.

2. To set an example.

Do villany, do, since you profess to do

Like workmen: I'll example you with thievery.

Shakespeare.

Lidian, you are the pattern of fair friendship

Exemplified for your love.

Beaumont and Fl. Lover's Progress.

The constancy there observed, by the natives of both sexes, in keeping to their old fashions exemplified to them by their predecessors, and by them still continued, is the great praise of this people.

Terry, Voyage to the E. Indies, p. 218.

EXAMPLER.* n. s. [from example.] This is a very old word, but now disused, and the Lat. exemplar is adopted in its stead. Hooker thus writes exam- plary, according to the English form; not exemplary. And from exemplar no doubt our present word sampler is formed. See SAMPLER.] A pattern; an example to be followed.

She was a myrrour and exemplar of honoure.

Bp. Fisher, Sermon 13.

EXAMPLELESS.* adj. [example and less.] Having no example or pattern. A word probably coined by Ben Jonson, and awkwardly melted into three syllables.

They that durst to strike
At so exampleless, and unblam'd a life,
As that of the renown'd Germanicus,
Will not sit down with that exploit alone:
"He threatens many, that hath injur'd one."

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

EXANGUIOUS.† adj. [exanguis, Lat.] This word should properly be exanguious, the Latin word being more frequently written with the s, as derived from sanguis, blood. But the old French also is exangue.] Having no blood; formed with animal juices, not sanguineous.

Hereby they confound the generation of perfect animals with imperfect, sanguineous with exanguious.

Brown.

The insects, if we take in the exanguious, both terrestrial and aquatick, may for number vie even with plants.

Ray.

To EXANIMATE.* v. a. [Lat. exanimo.]

1. To trouble greatly; to amaze; to dishearten; to discourage. See EXANIMATION.

Huloet, Cockeram, Bullokar, Sherwood.

2. To deprive of life.

Coles.

EXANIMATE.† adj. [exanimatus, Lat.]

1. Lifeless; dead.

And shiver'd ships which had been wrecked late,
Yet stuck with carcasses exanimate
Of such, as, having all their substance spent
In wanton joys and lustes intemperate,
Did afterwards make shipwrack violent
Both of their life and fame for ever sowly blent.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 7.

2. Spiritless; depressed.

The grey morn
Lifts her pale lustre on the paler wretch,
Exanimate by love.

Thomson, Spring.

EXANIMATION.† n. s. [from exanimate.] Deprivation of life, Dr. Johnson says, citing some dictionary. But the first usage of the word seems to have been for an amazement, a disheartening, as in the old vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar, where the sense of it for deprivation of life is not noticed. See To EXANIMATE.

EXANIMOUS. adj. [exanimis, Lat.] Lifeless; dead; killed.

EXANTHEMATA. n. s. [ἑκάνθηματα, Gr.] Efflorescencies; eruptions; breaking out; pustules.

EXANTHEMATOUS. adj. [from exanthemata.] Pustulous; efflorescent; eruptive.

To EXANTLATE. v. a. [exantla, Lat.]

1. To draw out.

2. To exhaust; to waste away.

By time those seeds are wearied or exantlated, or unable to act their parts any longer.

Boyle, Serpt. Chymist.

EXANTLATION.† n. s. [from exantlate.] The act of drawing out; exhaustion.

What libraries of new volumes after ages will behold, in what a new world of knowledge, the eyes of our posterity may be happy, a few ages may joyfully declare; and is but a cold thought unto those, who cannot hope to behold this examination of truth, or that obscured virgin half out of the pit; which might make some content with a commutation of the time of their lives, and to commend the fancy of the Pythagorean metempsychosis.

Brown, Chr. Morals, li. 5.

The prime productions of our society, which—have darkly and deeply couched under them the most finished and refined systems of all sciences and arts—I do not doubt to lay open by untwisting or unwinding, and either to draw up by exantlation, or display by incision.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, Intro.

EXARATION. n. s. [exaro, Latin.] The manual act of writing; the manner of manual writing.

Dict.

EXARCH.* n. s. [Gr. ἑαρχος, Lat. exarchus, Fr. exarque; from ἑ and αρχη, empire, command.] A viceroys; formerly the representative of the emperours, whose residence was at Ravenna.

The popes without admittance either of the emperours themselves, or of their lieutenants called exarchs, ascend not to the throne.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1606.) sign. Oo. 2. b.

EXARCHATE.* n. s. [from exarch; Fr. exarchat.]

The dignity of an exarch; the department governed by him.

If we would suppose the pismires had but our understandings, they also would have the method of a man's greatness, and divide their little molehills into provinces and exarchates.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iv. § 1.

Pepin, not unobedient to the pope's call, passing into Italy, frees him out of danger, and wins for him the whole exarchate of Ravenna.

Milton, Of Ref. in England.

EXARTICULATION. n. s. [ex and articulus, Lat.] The dislocation of a joint.

Dict.

To EXASPERATE.† v. a. [exaspero, Lat.]

1. To provoke; to enrage; to irritate; to anger; to make furious.

To take the widow,

Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril.

Shakespeare.

The people of Italy, who run into politicks, have something to exasperate them against the king of France.

Addison.

2. To heighten a difference; to aggravate; to embitter.

Many have studied to exasperate the ways of death, but fewer hours have been spent to soften that necessity.

Brown, Christ. Morals, ii. 13.

When ambition is unable to attain its end, it is not only wearied, but exasperated at the vanity of its labour.

Parnel.

3. To exacerbate; to heighten malignity.

The plaister alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and so exasperate it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EXASPERATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Provoked; embittered.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleive silk?

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Matters grew more exasperate between the kings of England and France, for the auxiliary forces of French and English were much blooded one against another.

Bacon.

EXASPERATE.† n. s. [from exasperate.] He that exasperates; a provoker.

Sherwood.

EXASPERATION.† n. s. [from exasperate.]

1. Aggravation; malignant representation.

My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with all the obloquies and exasperations they could.

King Charles.

2. Provocation; irritation; incitement to rage.

That which brings thee to that exasperation against them, as to say, that thou wouldst break thine own oath.

Donne, Devot. (1625.) p. 613.

Their ill usage and exasperations of him, and his zeal for maintaining his arguments, disposed him to take liberty.

Atterbury.

3. Exacerbation.

Judging, as of patients in fevers, by the exacerbation of the fit. Wotton, Rem. (lett. 1633.) p. 457.

TO EXAUCTORATE.† v. a. [exauctorato, Latin.]

1. To dismiss from service.

As for the defects, I no way presume to interest your Majesty in them: let them all fall on myself. Though as I have endeavoured to set down the truth impartially, I hope they will not be so great or many, as to exauctorate the rest. Ld. Herbert's Hen. VIII. Dedication.

We ought to have more regard to reason, and the true nature of things, than to pronounce him an extraordinary officer, who, for ought appears, is impowered to none but acts of ordinary and continual importance to the Church; and more reverence for the blessed Apostle, than to think he would issue a commission, full fraught with rules of perpetual use, to a temporary delegate, who was perhaps next day to be exauctorated, and never to have any exercise of them. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 36.

2. To deprive of a benefice.

Arch hereticks, in the primitive days of Christianity, were by the church treated with no other punishment than excommunication, and by exauctorating and depriving them of their degrees therein. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXAUCTORATION.† n. s. [from exauctorate.]

1. Dismissal from service.

No discharge in that war; no weapon against it, no dismissal from it, no vacation, or exauctoration. Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 327.

2. Deprivation; degradation.

Deposition, degradation, or exauctoration, is nothing else but the removing of a person from some dignity or order in the church, and the depriving him of his ecclesiastical preferments. Ayliffe, Parergon.

TO EXAUTHORATE.* v. a. [old Fr. exauthorer.] To dismiss from service; "to put men of war out of wages." Cockeram.

EXAUTHORATION.* n. s. [old Fr. exauthoration.] Deprivation of office.

In the exauthoration of episcopal office and dignity, in the demolition of churches. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 308.

TO EXAUTHORIZE.* v. a. [ex and authorize.] To deprive of, or put from, authority. Bullokar.

Sometimes — exauthorizing the prince, then hastening and moving forward his proneness to faithless abrogation. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

EXCANDESCENCE.† } n. s. [old Fr. excandescence, EXCANDESCENCY. } from excandescere, Latin.]

1. Heat; the state of growing hot.

2. Anger; the state of growing angry.

EXCANTATION.† n. s. [excanto, Latin.] Disenchantment by a counter-charm.

The don — enchanted in his cage, out of which there was no possibility of getting but by the power of a higher excantation. Gayton, Notes on D. Quiz. p. 277.

TO EXCARNATE.† v. a. [ex and carne, Lat.] To clear from flesh.

The mate [of the surgeon] shall practise anatomy, and manual operations; make skeletons of the sundry rare animals, which he shall have the opportunity to cut up; excarne bowels; artificially dry the muscles, &c. Sir W. Petty, Advice to Hartlib, (1648.) p. 14.

The spleen is most curiously excarneated, and the vessels filled with wax, whereby its fibres and vessels are very well seen. Grew, Museum.

EXCARNIFICATION. n. s. [excarifico, Latin.] The act of taking away the flesh.

TO EXCAVATE.† v. a. [excavo, Latin.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden border about the brims, were of that wonderful smallness, that Fisher put a thousand of them into an excavated pepper-corn. Ray on the Creation.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death,
Fill'd the deep caves, and numerous vaults beneath,
Which form'd with art, and wrought with endless toil,
Ran through the faithless excavated soil,
See the unwearied Briton delves his way,
And to the caverns lets in war and day. Blackmore.

Flat thecae, some like hats, some like buttons, excavated in the middle. Derham, Physico-Theology.

EXCAVATION.† n. s. [old Fr. excavation.]

1. The act of cutting into hollows.

2. The hollow formed; the cavity.

While our eye measures the eminent and the hollowed parts of pillars, the total object appeareth the bigger; and so, as much as those excavations do subtract, is supplied by a fallacy of the sight. Wotton, Architecture.

Christ was buried after the manner of the Jews, in a vault made by the excavation of the rocky, firm part of the earth. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

EXCAVATOR.* n. s. [from excavate.] A digger.

This sonorous word made its appearance, in a publick advertisement, Jan. 2. 1815, thus offering employment to "formers of a new road!" I know not of its existence elsewhere.

TO EXCAVE.* v. a. [Lat. excavo.] To hollow. See TO CAVE. Cockeram.

TO EXCECATE.* v. a. [Lat. excaco.] To make blind; to put out the eyes. Cockeram.

EXCECATION.* n. s. [Lat. excacatio.] Blindness.

Their own wicked hearts will still work and improve their own induration, excacation, and irritation to further sinning. Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 359.

TO EXCEED. v. a. [excedo, Latin.]

1. To go beyond; to outgo.

Nor did any of the crusts much exceed half an inch in thickness. Woodward on Fossils.

2. To excel; to surpass.

Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth. 1 Kings, x. 23.

TO EXCEED.† v. n.

1. To go too far; to pass the bounds of fitness.

In your prayers, and places of religion, use reverent postures and great attention, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot possibly exceed. Bp. Taylor.

2. To go beyond any limits.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed. Deut. xxv. 3. Fare you well, sir; these fellows may pray for you, you have made the scholars' commons exceed to day. Braun, and Fl. Wit at several Weapons.

3. To bear the greater proportion.

Justice must punish the rebellious deed; Yet punish so, as pity shall exceed. Dryden.

EXCEEDABLE.* adj. [from exceed.] That may surmount or excel. Sherwood.

EXCEEDER.* n. s. [from exceed.] One that passes the bounds of fitness.

That abuse doth not exceed the commission; not in the exceeders and transgressors, much less in them that exceed not. Mountagu, App. to-Cas. p. 317.

EXCEEDING.* n. s. [from exceed.] That which passes the usual limits.

It is found that there has been a great exceeding of late years in the second division, several brevets having been granted for the converting of subalterns into scarf-officers. Addison, Spect. No. 21.

EXCEEDING. participial adj. [from exceed.] Great in quantity, extent, or duration.

He saith, that cities were built an exceeding space of time before the great flood. Halag, Hist.

EXCEEDING. adv. [This word is not analogical, but has been long admitted and established.] In a very great degree; eminently.

The country is supposed to be exceeding rich. Abbot.
The Genoese were exceeding powerful by sea, and contended often with the Venetians for superiority. Raleigh.
Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let not arrogance come out of your mouth. 1 Sam. ii. 3.

The action of the Iliad and that of the Aeneid were in themselves exceeding short; but are beautifully extended and diversified by the invention of episodes, and the machinery of the gods. Addison, Spect.

The serum of the blood affords, by distillation, an exceeding limpid water, neither acid or alkaline. Arbuthnot.

EXCEEDINGLY. adv. [from exceeding.] To a great degree; greatly; very much.

They cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

St. Mark, xv. 14.

Isaac trembled exceedingly.

Gen. xxvii. 33.

The earl of Surry, lieutenant of Ireland, was much feared of the king's enemies, and exceedingly beloved of the king's subjects. Davies on Ireland.

Precious stones look exceedingly well, when they are set in those places which we would make to come out of the picture.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Is not this medium exceedingly more rare and subtle than the air, and exceedingly more elastick and active?

Newton, Opticks.

EXCEEDINGNESS. * n. s. [from exceeding.] Greatness in quantity, extent, or duration. Sherwood.

To EXCEL. † v. a. [excello, Latin.]

1. To outgo in good qualities; to surpass.

Venus her myrtle, Phoebus has his bays;

Ten both excels, which you vouchsafe to praise.

Waller.

How heroes rise, how patriots set,
Thy father's bloom and death may tell;

Excels others, these were great;

Thou, greater still, must these excel.

Prior.

2. To overpower.

He ended, or I heard no more; for now

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd

Which it had long stood under, strain'd to the highth

In that celestial colloquy sublime,

As with an object that excels the sense,

Dazzled and spent, sunk down, and sought repair

Of sleep.

Milton, P. L.

3. To exceed, simply.

She open'd;

But to shut, excell'd her power.

Milton, P. L.

To EXCE'L. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be great.

Then to Silvia let us sing,

That Silvia is excelling.

Shakspeare.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel.

Gen. xlix.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury; so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other.

Bacon, Holy War.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing;
those to be sought and frequented that excel in some quality or other.

Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel;

Of love sing better, and of arms as well.

Dryden.

Let those teach others, who themselves excel;

And censure freely, who have written well.

Pope.

EXCELLENCE. † n. s. [excellence, French; excellencia, EXCELLENCY } Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

Sudden mind arose

In Adam, not to let the occasion pass

Given him by this great conference to know

Of things above this world, and of their being

Who dwell in heaven, whose excellence he saw

Transcend his own so far; whose radiant forms,

Divine effulgence, whose high power, so far

Exceeded human.

Milton, P. L.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like to the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature.

Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in musick. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addison.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellence,

That angels love good men with.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

6. A title of honour. It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadours, and governors.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,

To have a goodly peace concluded of.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

EXCELLENT. † adj. [excellent, old Fr. excellens, Lat.]

1. Of great virtue; of great worth; of great dignity.

Arts and sciences are excellent, in order to certain ends.

Taylor.

2. Eminent in any good quality.

He is excellent in power and in judgement.

Job, xxxvii. 23.

EXCELLENTLY. adv. [from excellent.]

1. Well; in a high degree.

He determines that man was erect, because he was made with hands, as he excellently declares.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine.

Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous.

Dryden.

EXCE'NTRICK. * See ECCENTRICK.

To EXCEPT. † v. a. [old Fr. excepter, from excipio,
Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

1 Cor. xv. 27.

Adam, behold

The effects, which thy original crime hath wrought

In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd

The excepted tree.

Milton, P. L.

To EXCE'PT. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against.

Locke.

EXCE'PT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonick idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.

Richard except, those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow.

Shakspeare.

God and his Son except,

Nought valued he nor fear'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. Unless; if it be not so that.

It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it, except we know it.

Tylston.

EXCE'PTING. preposit. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden, Pers.
 People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here, and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by
 it. Collier on Duelling.

EXCEPTION. † n. s. [from except; exceptio, Latin; ex-ception, old French.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleas, in exception to all gen'ral rules,
 Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools. Pope.

3. Thing excepted or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted; unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford and sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
 Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
 That proud exception to all nature's laws,
 To invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope.

4. Objection; cavil; with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker, Preface.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall show cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducive to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter,
 Lest he should take exceptions to my love. Shakspeare.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,
 Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r
 Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shakspeare.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Shakspeare.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children. Bacon, Hen. VII.

9. [In law.] Exception is a stop or stay to an action, being used both in the civil and common law, and in both divided into dilatory and peremptory.

Cowel.

EXCEPTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleasantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Addison.

EXCEPTIONER. † n. s. [from exception.] One who makes objections.

Thus much, readers, in favour of the softer spirited christian; for other exceptioners there was no thought taken.

Milton, Antient. Reg. Def.

EXCEPTIOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so superstitious, sharp, troublesome, froward, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very sores of society. South.

EXCEPTIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from exceptious.] Peevishness.

A froward, malicious exceptiousness. Barrow, vol. i. S. r.

EXCEPTIVE. † adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

It is to be inferred either by a conjunction causal, illative, exceptive, &c. Instruct, for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 108.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts, Logick.

EXCEPTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. This is not in use.

Forgive my gen'ral and exceptless rashness,
 Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim
 One honest man. Shakspeare, Timon.

EXCEPTOR. n. s. [from except.] Objector; one that makes exceptions.

The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

TO EXCERN. v. a. [excerno, Latin.] To strain out; to separate or emit by strainers; to send out by excretion.

That which is dead, or corrupted, or excerned, hath antipathy with the same thing when it is alive and sound, and with those parts which do excern. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Exercise first sendeth nourishment into the parts; and secondly, helpeth to excern by sweat, and so maketh the parts assimilate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An unguent or pap prepared, with an open vessel to excern it into. Ray on the Creation.

TO EXCERP. † v. a. [Lat. excerpo.] To pick out. Cockeram.

In your reading excerp, and note, in your books such things as you like. Hales, Rem. p. 288.

TO EXCEPT. † v. a. [Lat. exceptus.] To select. Not so correct as excerp.

Possibly he meaneth his own dear words I have excepted. Barnard, Life of Heylin, (1683,) p. 12.

EXCEPTION. n. s. [exceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of gleanng; selecting.

2. The thing gleaned or selected.

Times have consumed his works, saving some few exceptions. Raleigh.

EXCEPTOR. † n. s. [Lat. exceptor.] A picker or culler.

I have not been surreptitious of whole pages together out of the doctor's printed volumes, and appropriated them to myself without any mark, or asterism, as he has done. I am no such exceptor. Barnard, Life of Heylin, p. 12.

EXCERPTS. † n. s. pl. [Lat. excerpta.] Passages selected from authors; extracts.

EXCESS. † n. s. [old Fr. excez, from excessus, Latin.]

1. More than enough; faulty superfluity.

Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is copied the want of a principal part of duty. Hooker.

Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity, and admits no excess but error: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon, Essays.

Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray on the Creation.

2. Exuberance; state of exceeding; comparative exuberance.

Let the superfluous and lust dieted man,
 That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;

So distribution shall undo excess,

And each man have enough.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The several rays in that white light retain their colorifick qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton, Opticks.

3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.

It was excess of wine that set him on,
And on his more advice we pardon him.

Shakespeare.

There will be need of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts. Dugda, Rules for Devotion.

4. Violence of passion.

5. Transgression of due limits.

[He] the full wrath beside

Of vengeful justice bore for our excess.

Milton, Ode on the Circumcision.

A popular way, by forcing kings to give
More than was fit for subjects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes; and one excess

Made both, by striving to be greater, less.

Denham.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness; even parsimony itself, which sits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury.

EXCESSIVE. adj. [excessiv, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.

If panicum be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

2. Vehement beyond measure in kindness or dislike.

Be not excessive toward any.

Eccles. xxxiii. 29.

The people's property it is by excessive favour, to bring great men to misery, and then to be excessive in pity. Hayward.

EXCESSIVELY. adv. [from excessive.]

1. Exceedingly; eminently; in a great degree.

A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable, who believes there is no virtue but on his own side. Addison.

2. In an intemperate way.

Which having swallow'd up excessively,
He soone in vomit up againe doth lay.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 3.

EXCESSIVENESS. n. s. [from excessive.] Exceeding-ness. Sherwood.

TO EXCHANGE. v. a. [exchanger, French; ex-cambiare, low Latin.]

1. To give or quit one thing for the sake of gaining another.

They shall not sell of it, neither exchange nor alienate the first fruits. Ezek. xlviii. 14.

Exchange his sheep for sheels, or wool for a sparkling pebble, or a diamond. Locke.

Take delight in the good things of this world, so as to remember that we are to part with them, and to exchange them for more excellent and durable enjoyments. Atterbury.

2. To give and take reciprocally.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;

Mine and my father's blood, be not upon thee,

Nor thine on me.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Words having naturally no signification, the idea must be learned by those who would exchange thoughts, and hold intelligible discourse with others. Locke.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness,

So pay the guilt of all my broken vows,

My perjuries to thee be all forgotten.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

3. It has with before the person with whom the exchange is made, and for before the thing taken in exchange.

The king called in the old money, and erected exchanges where the weight of old money was exchanged for new.

Camden.

Being acquainted with the laws and fashions of his own country, he has something to exchange with those abroad.

Locke.

EXCHANGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of giving and receiving reciprocally.

And thus they parted, with exchange of harms;

Much blood the monsters lost, and they their arms.

Waller.

They lend their corn, they make exchanges; they are always ready to serve one another. Addison.

2. Traffick by permutation.

The world is maintained by intercourse; and the whole course of nature is a great exchange, in which one good turn is, and ought to be, the stated price of another. South.

3. The form or act of transferring, properly by bills or notes.

I have bills for money by exchange

From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Shakespeare.

4. The balance of the money of different nations.

He was skilled in the exchange beyond seas, and in all the circumstances and practices thereof. Hayward on Edw. VI.

5. The thing given in return for something received.

If none appear to prove upon thy person

Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,

There is my pledge: I'll prove it on thy heart.

— There's my exchange; what in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Spend all I have, only give me so much time in exchange of it. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

It made not the silver coined go for more than its value in all things to be bought; but just so much as the denomination was raised, just so much less of commodity had the buyer in exchange for it. Locke.

If blood you seek, I will my own resign:

O spare her life, and in exchange take mine.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

6. The thing received in return for something given.

The respect and love which was paid you by all, who had the happiness to know you, was a wise exchange for the honours of the court. Dryden.

7. The place where the merchants meet to negotiate their affairs; place of sale.

He that uses the same words sometimes in one, and sometimes in another signification, ought to pass, in the schools, for as fair a man, as he does in the market and exchange, who sells several things under the same name. Locke.

No thing, no place is strange,

While his fair bosom is the world's exchange.

Denham.

EXCHANGEABLE. adj. [from exchange.] That may be exchanged.

EXCHANGER. n. s. [from exchange.] One who practises exchange.

Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers. St. Matt. xxv. 27.

Whilst bullion may be had for a small price more than the weight of our current cash, these exchangers generally chuse rather to buy bullion than run the risk of melting down our coin, which is criminal by the law. Locke.

EXCHEAT. n. s. See ESCHEAT.

[He] by my ruins thinks to make them great:

To make one great by other's loss, is bad excheat.

Spenser, F. Q.

EXCHEATOR. n. s. See ESCHEATOR.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers; as sheriff, admiral, receiver, havener, customer, butler, searcher, comptroller, gager, excheator, feodary, auditor, and clerk of the market. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

EXCHEQUER. n. s. [eschequeir, Norman French; schaccharium, low Latin, from schatz, a treasure, German, which is the Gothick skatts.] The court to which are brought all the revenues belonging to the crown. It consists of two parts; whereof one dealeth specially in the hearing and deciding of all causes appertaining to the king's coffers: the other is called the receipt of the exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and paying of money. It is also a court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenues of the crown are handled. Harris.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. Shakespeare.

Your treasures
Are quite exhausted, the exchequer's empty. Deborah, Sophy.
Clipped money will pass whilst the king's bankers and at last the exchequer takes it. Locke.

To EXCHEQUER. * v. a. [from the noun.] To institute a process against a person in the court of exchequer. Modern.

Among other strange verbs, the following has arisen in vulgar language, viz. to exchequer a man; which is, to institute a process against him, in the court of exchequer, for non-payment of a debt due to the king, and in some other cases.

Perge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

EXCISEABLE. * adj. [from excise.] Liable to the duty of excise.

The concealment of excisable goods is subject to a forfeiture of those goods, and treble value. Act of Parl. 11 Geo. ch. 30.

EXCISE. † n. s. [accijis, Dutch; excisum, Latin.]

A tax levied upon various commodities by several acts of parliament; and collected by officers appointed for that purpose. It was introduced towards the close of Charles the first's reign. The judicious biographer of Dr. Johnson admits, that prejudice dictated what the great lexicographer has given as the definition of excise; and adds, that the late lord Mansfield thought it actionable. See Boswell's Life of Johnson. Instead of rendering what may be distasteful more bitter by aggravated description, I have presumed to give a plain account of the impost, rather than to place opinion "to the account of capricious and humorous indulgence."

The people should pay a ratable tax for their sheep, and an excise for every thing which they should eat. Hayward.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise. Cleaveland.

With hundred rows of teeth, the shark exceeds,
And on all trades like Cassawar she feeds. Marvel.

Hire large houses, and oppress the poor,
By farm'd excise. Dryden, Juv.

To EXCISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To levy excise upon a person or thing.

In South-sea days, not happier when surmis'd
The lord of thousands, than if now excis'd. Pope, Horace.

EXCISEMAN. n. s. [excise and man.] An officer who inspects commodities, and rates their excise.

EXCISION. † n. s. [excisio, Latin.] Extirpation; destruction; ruin; the act of cutting off; the state of being cut off.

O poor and miserable city, what sundry torments, excisions, subversions, depopulations, and other evil adventures hath happened unto thee, since thou wert bereft of that noble court of sapience! Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 197.

Pride is one of the fatalest instruments of excision. Decay of Piety.

Such conquerours are the instruments of vengeance on these nations that have filled up the measure of iniquities, and are grown ripe for excision. Atterbury.

EXCITABILITY. * n. s. [from excitable.] Capability of being excited; proneness to be excited.

EXCITABLE. * adj. [from excite.] Easy to be excited. His affections were most quick and excitable by their due objects. Barrow, Works, i. 475.

EXCITATION. † n. s. [excitation, old French; from excito, Lat. to excite.]

1. The act of exciting, or putting into motion.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body, either by ingress of the ambient body into the body putrefied, or by excitation and solicitation of the body putrefied, by the heat ambient. Second Part of the

2. The act of rousing or awakening.

Here are words of fervent excitation to the frozen hearts of others. Bp. Hall, Works, in 193.

The original of sensible and spiritual ideas may be owing to sensation and reflection, the recollection and fresh excitation of them to other occasions. Watts, Logic.

EXCITATIVE. * adj. [old Fr. excitativ.] Having power to excite.

Admonitory of duty, and excitative of devotion.

Barrow, Expos. on the Creed.

To EXCITE. v. a. [excito, Latin.]

1. To rouse; to animate; to stir up; to encourage.

The Lacedemonians were more excited to desire of honour with the excellent verses of the poet Tirtæus, than with all the exhortations of their captains. Spenser on Ireland.

That kind of poesy which excites to virtue the greatest men, is of greatest use to human kind. Dryden.

2. To put into motion; to awaken; to raise.

EXCITEMENT. n. s. [from excite.] The motive by which one is stirred up, animated, or put in action.

How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? Shakespeare, Tempest.

EXCITER. n. s. [from excite.]

1. One that stirs up others, or puts them in motion. They never punished the delinquency of the tumults and their exciters. King Charles.

2. The cause by which any thing is raised or put in motion. Hope is the grand exciter of industry. Decay of Piety.

EXCITING. * n. s. [from excite.] Excitation. Wanting many excitings of grace.

Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 21.

To EXCLAIM. v. n. [exclamo, Latin.]

1. To cry out with vehemence; to make an outcry; to cry out querulously and outrageously.

This ring,
Which, when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Those who exclaim against foreign tyranny, do, to this intestine usurper, make an entire dedication of themselves.

The most insupportable of tyrants exclaim against the exercise of arbitrary power. L'Estrange.

2. To declare with loud vociferation.

Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

EXCLAIM. n. s. [from the verb] Clamour; outcry. Now disused.

Alas, the part I had in Glo'ster's blood,
Doth more solicit me than your exclaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

EXCLAIMER. n. s. [from exclaim.] One that makes vehement outcries; one that speaks with great heat and passion.

I must tell this exclaimer, that his manner of proceeding is very strange and unaccountable. Atterbury.

EXCLAMATION. n. s. [exclamatio, Latin.]

1. Vehement outcry; clamour; outrageous vociferation.

The ears of the people are continually beaten with exclamations against abuses in the church. Hooker, Dedication.

Either be patient, or intreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war,
Thus wilt thou drown your exclamations. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. An emphatical utterance; a pathological sentence.

O Maudsoms! Maudsoms! but what serve exclamations, where there are no ears to receive the sound? Sidney.

3. A note by which a pathological sentence is marked thus!

EXCLAMATORY.† adj. [from exclaim.]

1. Practising exclamation.

2. Containing exclamation.

Which point I shall conclude with those exclamatory words of St. Paul, so full of wonder and astonishment in Rom. xi. 33.

"How unsearchable are his judgements, and his ways past finding out!" South, Sermon. iv. 346.

TO EXCLUDE. v. a. [excludo, Latin.]

1. To shut out; to hinder from entrance or admission.

Fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' incroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden, Virg.
Sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms.

Dryden, Knight's Tale.

Bodies do each singly possess its proper portion, according to the extent of its solid parts, and thereby exclude all other bodies from that space. Locke.

Though these three sorts of substances do not exclude one another out of the same place, yet we cannot conceive but that they must necessarily each of them exclude any of the same kind out of the same place. Locke.

If the church be so unhappily contrived as to exclude from its communion such persons likeliest to have great abilities, it should be altered. Swift.

2. To debar; to hinder from participation; to prohibit.

Justice, that sits and frowns, where publick laws

Exclude soft mercy from a private cause,

In your tribunal most herself does please;

There only smiles, because she lives at ease. Dryden.

This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

3. To except in any position.

4. Not to comprehend in any grant or privilege.

They separate from all apparent hope of life and salvation, thousands whom the goodness of Almighty God doth not exclude. Hooker.

5. To dismiss from the womb or egg.

Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, wherewith excluding but one a-day, the latter brood impatient, by a forcible prurition, antedates their period of exclusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXCLUSION.† n. s. [from exclude.]

1. The act of shutting out or denying admission.

In bodies that need detention of spirits, the exclusion of the air doth good; but in bodies that need emission of spirits, it doth hurt. Baron, Nat. Hist.

2. Rejection; not reception in any manner.

If he is for an entire exclusion of fear, which is supposed to have some influence in every law, he opposes himself to every government. Addison, Frecholder.

3. The act of debarring from any privilege or participation.

He pretended that he preferred limitations to an exclusion; because the one kept up the monarchy still, only passing over one person; whereas the other brought us really into a commonwealth as soon as we had a popish king over us. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1679.

4. Exception.

There was a question asked at the table, whether the French king would agree to have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception and exclusion that he should not marry her himself. Bacon, Hen. VII.

5. The dismissal of the young from the egg or womb.

How were it possible the womb should contain the child, nay, sometimes twins, till they come to their due perfection and maturity for exclusion? Ray on the Creation.

6. Ejection; emission; thing emitted.

The salt and distilled acridity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and bladder, yet it remains undivided in birds, and hath but a single descent by the guts, with the exclusions of the belly. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXCLUSIONIST.* n. s. [from exclusion.] One who would debar another from any privilege. See the third sense of EXCLUSION.

The exclusionists had a fair prospect of success.

For, Hist. of the Reign of K. James II.

EXCLUSIVE. adj. [from exclude.]

1. Having the power of excluding or denying admission.

They obstacle find none

Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:

Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,

Total they mix. Milton, P. L.

2. Debarring from participation.

In Scripture there is no such thing as an heir that was, by right of nature, to inherit all, exclusive of his brethren. Locke.

3. Not taking into an account or number: opposed to inclusive.

I know not whether he reckons the dross exclusive or inclusive with his three hundred and sixty tons of copper. Swift.

4. Excepting.

EXCLUSIVELY. adv. [from exclusive.]

1. Without admission of another to participation: sometimes with to, properly with of.

It is not easy to discern, among the many differing substances obtained from the same portion of matter, which ought to be esteemed, exclusively to all the rest, its inexistent elementary ingredients: much less what primogenial and simple bodies, conveyed together, compose it. Boyle.

Ulysses addresses himself to the queen chiefly or primarily, but not exclusively of the king. Broom on the Odyssey.

2. Without comprehension in an account or number; not inclusively.

The first part lasts from the date of the citation to the joining of issue, exclusively: the second continues to a conclusion in the cause, inclusively. Ayliffe, Parergon.

TO EXCOCT. v. a. [excoctus, Latin.] To boil up; to make by boiling.

Salt and sugar, excocted by heat, are dissolved by cold and moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO EXCOGITATE.† v. a. [excogitare, Latin.]

Heylin calls this word, in 1656, strange and unusual. Yet it had then been in use more than a century; though Dr. Johnson produces no example earlier than that of More, who was fond of the word; for I have repeatedly found it in his writings. But I am to shew the word in the service of elder writers.] To invent; to strike out by thinking.

He [Jul. Cæsar] did — excogitate most excellent policies and devices to vanquish or subdue his enemies.

Sir T. Elgot, Gos. fol. 73. b.

He must first think, and excogitate his matter; then choose his words, and examine the weight of either.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If the wit of man had been to contrive this organ, what could he have possibly excogitated more accurate?

More.

The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination, excogitated by the heathen, were particular.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

We shall find them to be little else than excogitated and invented models, not much arising from the true image of the things themselves. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO EXCOGITATE.* v. n. To think.

I take it to be my duty — to meditate, and to excogitate, of myself, wherein I may best, by my travels, derive your virtues to the good of your people.

Bacon to K. James I. on the Laws of Eng.

EXCOGITA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. excogitation.] Invention.

Wherefore to consideration pertaineth excogitation, and advisement; to providence, provision and execution.

When we are alone, we are not always busy; the labour of excogitation is too violent to last long; the ardour of enquiry will sometimes give way to idleness or satiety.

Johnson, Rameles, ch. 43.

To EXCO'MMUNE.* v. a. [low Lat. excommunis, the same as excommunicatus.] To exclude; to dis-com-mun.

Poets, indeed, were excommunicated Plato's commonwealth; but yet Augustus, in the zenith of his empire, cherished them, and sate with them.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quis. p. 21.

EXCOMMUNICABLE. adj. Liable or deserving to be excommunicated.

Perhaps excommunicable; yea, and cast out for notorious improbity.

Hooker.

To EXCOMMUNICATE. v. a. [excommunico, low Latin.] To eject from the communion of the visible church by an ecclesiastical censure; to interdict from the participation of holy mysteries.

What if they shall excommunicate me, hath the doctrine of meekness any salve for me then?

Hammond, Pract. Calcechism.

The office is performed by the parish priest at interment, but not unto persons excommunicated.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXCOMMUNICATE.* adj. [Lat. excommunicatus.] Excluded from the fellowship of the church.

Thou shalt stand excommunicate and excommunicate;

And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt

From his allegiance to an heretic.

Shakespeare, K. John.

And when I

Am the recusant, in that resolute state

What hurts it me to be excommunicate.

Dryden, Poems, p. 77.

EXCOMMUNICATE.* n. s.

1. One who is excluded from the fellowship of the church.

They [the druids] sate as judges, and determined all causes emergent, civil and criminal; subjecting the disobedient, and such as made default, to interdicts, and censures; prohibiting them from sacred assemblies; taking away their capacities in honourable offices; and so disabling them, that (as our now outlaws, excommunicates, and attainted persons,) they might not commence suit against any man.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

2. One cut off from any advantage.

When thou, poor excommunicate

From all the joys of love, shalt see

The full reward, &c.

Carew's Poems, p. 19.

EXCOMMUNICA'TION. n. s. [from excommunicate.] An ecclesiastical interdict; exclusion from the fellowship of the church.

As for excommunication, it neither shutteth out from the mystical, nor ~~from~~ from the visible church; but only from fellowship with the visible in holy duties.

Hooker.

To EXCORIATE.* v. a. [old Fr. excorier, Lat. excorio, considered by Heylin, in 1656, as an uncouth and unusual word. It is, in the enlarged vocabulary of Bullokar of that year, with a definition similar to the present.] To flay; to strip off the skin.

An hypercarconis arises upon the excoriated eyelid, and turneth it outward.

Wisenan, Surg.

A loosened prossa often a fatal symptom in fevers; for it weakens, excoriates, and inflames the bowels.

Arbuthnot.

EXCORIA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. excoriation.]

1. Loss of skin; privation of skin; the act of flaying.

Some four years after the contention betwixt Apollo and Pan, and a little before the excoriation of Marjane.

Brewer, Gen. of Lingua, iii. 5.

Our poets, the John Ketches of the nation,
Have seen'd to lash ye, ev'n to excoriation.

Dryden, Prol. to Albion and Albani.

The pituite secreted in the nose, mouth, and intestines, is not an excrementitious, but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts from excoriations.

Arbuthnot.

2. Plunder; spoil; the act of stripping of possessions.

It hath marvellously enhanced the revenues of the crown, though with a pitiful excoriation of the poorer sort.

Howel.

EXCORTICA'TION. n. s. [from cortex and ex, Latin.]

Pulling the bark off any thing.

Quincy.

EXCREABLE.* adj. [Lat. excreabilis. This word should be written with an s, being derived from ex and serco.] Which may be spit out.

Bullokar.

To EXCREATE.* v. a. [excreo, Latin.] To eject at the mouth by hawking, or forcing matter from the throat.

Cockeram.

EXCREA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. excreatio.] A retching; a spitting out.

Cockeram.

EXCREMENT.* n. s. [excrement, Fr. excrementum, Latin.]

1. That which is thrown out as useless, noxious, or corrupted from the natural passages of the body.

We see that those excrements, that are of the first digestion, smell the worst; as the excrements from the belly.

Bacon.

It fares with politick bodies as with the physical; each would convert all into their own proper substance, and cast forth as excrement what will not so be changed.

Rulegh, Essays.

Their sordid avarice makes

In excrements, and hires the very jakes.

Dryden, Jun.

Farce, in itself, is of a nasty scent;

But the gain smells not of the excrement.

Dryden.

You may find, by dissection, not only their stomachs full of meat, but their intestines full of excrement.

Bentley.

The excrements of horses are nothing but hay, and, as such, combustible.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Hair.

Why is Time such a niggard of his hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement!

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

The very hairs of your head are all numbered: God keeps an account even of that stringy excrement.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 167.

EXCREMENTAL.* adj. [from excrement.] That which is voided as excrement.

God hath given virtues to springs, fountains, earth, plants, and the excremental parts of the basest living creatures.

Rulegh.

Full of filthy flegm, stinking, putrid, excremental stuff.

Barton, Anal. of Mel. p. 166.

That virtue therefore which is but youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental whiteness.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

EXCREMENT'IOUS. adj. [from excrement.] Containing excrements; consisting of matter excreted from the body; offensive or useless to the body.

The excrementitious moisture passeth in birds through a fairer and more delicate strainer than in beasts.

Bacon.

Toil of the mind destroys health, by attracting the spirits from their task of concoction to the brain; whither they carry along with them clouds of vapours and excrementitious humours.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The lungs are the grand emunctory of the body; and the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood.

Woodward.

An animal fluid no ways excrementitious, mild, elaborated, and nutritious.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To EXCREMENTIZE.* v. n. [from excrement.] To void excrement.

They [Sir C. Sedley, Ld. Buckhurst, &c.] being all infected with strong liquors, — excrementized in the streets.

Life of A. Wood, (an. 1663.) p. 109.

EXCRESCENCE. † n. s. [excresecere, old Fr.; EXCRESCENCY.] from excreco, Lat.] Something growing out of another without use, and contrary to the common order of production; preternatural production.

All beyond this is monstrous, 'tis out of nature, 'tis an excrecence, and not a living part of poetry. Dryden.

We have little more than the excrecencies of the Spanish monarchy. Addison on the War.

They are the excrecences of our souls; which, like our hair and beards, look horrid or becoming, as we cut or let them grow. Tutler.

Tumours and excrecences of plants, out of which generally issues a fly or a worm, are at first made by such insects which wound the tender buds. Bentley.

EXCRESCENT. adj. [excrescens, Latin.] That which grows out of another with preternatural superfluity.

Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrecent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come. Pope.

EXCRETION. † n. s. [excretion, old Fr. excretio, Latin.]

1. Separation of animal substance; ejecting somewhat quite out of the body, as of no further use, which is called excremeft. Quincy.

Upon the use of aloe both in hawks and cormorants, I have sometimes observed bloody excretions.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 113.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, are a yellowish skin, white hard faces, loss of appetite, and lixivial urine. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The thing excremented.

The moss from apple trees is little better than an excretion. Bacon.

EXCRETIVE. adj. [excretus, Latin.] Having the power of separating and ejecting excrements.

A diminution of the body happens by the excretive faculty, excreting and evacuating more than necessary. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXCRETORY. adj. [from excretion.] Having the quality of separating and ejecting superfluous parts.

EXCRETORY. n. s. The instrument of excretion.

Excretories of the body are nothing but slender slips of the arteries, deriving an appropriated juice from the blood. Cheyue.

EXCRUCIABLE. adj. [from excruciate.] Liable to torment. Dict.

To EXCRUCIATE. v. a. [excrucio, Latin.] To torture; to torment.

And here my heart long time excruciate,
Amongst the leaves I rested all that night. Chapman, Odyssey.

Leave them, as long as they keep their hardness and impenitent hearts, to those gnawing and excruciating fears, those whips of the Divine Nemesis, that frequently scourge even atheists themselves. Bentley.

EXCRUCIATION.* n. s. [from excruciate.] Torment; vexation.

He that by the oracle was approved for the wisest, confessed, though he knew before he married her, that his Zantippe was a soul insufferable; yet he wittingly did marry her to exercise his patience, that by the practice of enduring her shrewish heats, he might be able to brook all companies; the brawls, the scorns, the sophisms, and the petulancies of rude and unskilful men; the frettings, the thwartings, and the excruciations of life. Fellham, Rev. ii. 37.

EXCUBATION. n. s. [excubatio, Latin.] The act of watching all night. Dict.

To EXCULPATE. † v. a. [ex and culpo, Latin.] To clear from the imputation of a fault.

A good child will not seek to exculpate himself at the expense of the most revered characters. Richardson, Clarissa.

After these several petitions, manifestly tending to fix all the blame of the misadministration in the latter part of Edward the Third's reign upon the same set of men who had been called to account for it, and punished in the parliament of 1376, and who had gotten themselves exculpated in the succeeding parliament. Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 144.

EXCULPATION.* n. s. [from exculpate.] The act of clearing from alleged blame.

Abellard entered on a tedious exculpation of himself.

Berington, Hist. of Ab. p. 199.

EXCULPATORY.* adj. [from exculpate.] Clearing from imputed fault.

By this fond and eager acceptance of an exculpatory comment, Pope testified that whatever might be the seeming or real import of the principles which he had received from Bolingbroke, he had not intentionally attacked religion.

Johnson, Life of Pope.

To EXCUR. v. n. To pass beyond limits. A word not used.

His disease was an asthma, oft excurring to an orthopnea; the cause, a translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXCURSION. n. s. [excursion, French; excurro, Latin]

1. The act of deviating from the stated or settled path; a ramble.

The muse whose early voice you taught to sing,
Prescrib'd her heights and prun'd her tender wing;
Her guide now lost, no more attempts to rise,
But in low numbers short excursions tries. Pope.

2. An expedition into some distant part.

The mind extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible. Locke.

3. Progression beyond fixed limits.

The causes of those great excursions of the seasons into the extremes of cold and heat, are very obscure. Arbuthnot on Air.

4. Digression; ramble from a subject.

Expect not that I should beg pardon for this excursion, till I think it a digression, to insist on the blessedness of Christ in heaven. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

I am too weary to allow myself any excursion from the main design. Atterbury.

EXCURSIVE. † adj. [from excurro, Latin.] Rambling; wandering; deviating.

But why so far excursive, when at hand
Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace? Thomson, Spring.

Pensive I stray, or with the rising dawn

On fancy's eagle-wing excursive soar. Thomson, Summer.

The first is miscellaneous and excursive, but the subjects often lead to an unbecoming licentiousness of language and images. Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 31.

EXCURSIVELY.* adv. [from excursive.] In a wandering, unsettled manner.

The flesh of animals, which feed excursively, is allowed to have a higher flavour than that of those who are couped up.

Boswell, Life of Johnson, i. 35.

EXCURSIVENESS.* n. s. [from excursive.] The act of passing beyond usual bounds.

With a sober spirit of inquiry, he [Mr. Bryant] possesses a free excursiveness of mind. Brit. Crit. 1798, Jan.

EXCUSABLE. † adj. [old Fr. excusable.] Pardonable; that for which some excuse or apology may be admitted.

Though he were already steep into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Stdney.

Learned men are excusable in particulars whereupon our salvation dependeth not. Raleigh, History.

Not only that;

That were excusable, that and thousands more
Of scannable import. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

For his intermeddling with arms he is the more excusable, because many others of his sort are companions. Howell.

Before the Gospel, impiety was much more excusable because men were ignorant. Whitlock.

EXCUSABLE. † n. s. [from excusable.] Pardoning; capability to be excused.

It may satisfy others of the excusableness of my dissatisfaction, to peruse the ensuing relation. Boyle.

EXCUSA-TION. † n. s. [old Fr. excusation.] Excuse; plea; apology.

Prefaces, and passages, and excusations, and other speeches of reference to the person, are great wastes of time; and though they seem to proceed of modesty, they are bravery. Bacon, Essay of Dispatch.

Excusations, cessions, modesty itself well governed, are but arts of ostentation. Bacon, Essay of Vain-Glory.

Goodness to be admired, that it refuted not his argument in the punishment of his excusation. Brown.

EXCUSATORY. adj. [from excuse.] Pleading excuse; apologetical; making apology.

TO EXCUSE. v. a. [excuso, Latin.]

1. To extenuate by apology.

Bad men excuse their faults, good men will leave them; He acts the third crime that defends the first. B. Jonson.

2. To disengage from an obligation; remit attendance.

I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused. St. Luke, xiv. 19.

Excuse some courtly strains, No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

6. To throw off imputation by a feigned apology.

Think you that we excuse ourselves unto you. 2 Cor. xii. 19.

7. To justify; to vindicate. This sense is rare.

Excusing or else excusing one another. Rom. ii. 15.

EXCUSE. n. s. [from the verb. The last syllable of the verb is sounded as if written excuse, that of the noun with the natural sound.]

1. Plea offered in extenuation; apology.

I was set upon by some of your servants, whom because I have in my just defence evil entreated, I came to make my excuse to you. Sidney.

Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse, But, as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence. Shakespeare.

As good success admits no examination, so the contrary allows of no excuse how reasonable or just soever. Raleigh.

We find out some excuse or other for deferring good resolutions, till our intended retreat is cut off by death. Addison.

2. The act of excusing or apologizing.

Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence, That thou might'st win the more thy father's love, Pleading to win in excuse of it. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Cause for which one is excused.

Let no vain hope your easy mind seduce; Foreign ill humours are excuses. Reveries.

Nothing but love's passionate would produce; And I allow your rage that kind excuse. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

EXCUSABLE. † adj. [from excuse.] That for which no excuse or apology can be given.

Excusable is the idle man's excuse, sleeping out his lamp, or as vainly burning it. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 301.

You are are likely to come to excuse of your servants, so unpitied, and so scorned. Hammond, Works, v. p. 22.

The voluntary enslaving myself is excusable. Bacon, Essays.

EXCUSE. † n. s. [from excuse.]

1. One who pleads for another.

In vain would his excuser endeavour to palliate his enormities, by imputing them to madness. Swift.

2. One who forgives another.

Love is a sufficient excuse and excuser of greater errors than are mine. Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 90.

TO EXCURS. † v. a. [excursus, Latin.]

1. To seize and detain by law.

The person of a man ought not, by the civil law, to be taken for a debt, unless his goods and estate have been first excused. Ayliffe, Parergon.

They could not totally excuse the notions of a Deity out of their minds. Stillington, Orig. Sac. i. 1.

EXCURSION. n. s. [excursio, Latin.] Seizure by law.

If upon an excursion there are not goods to satisfy the judgment, his body may be attached. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXECRABLE. † adj. [execrable, old Fr. execrabilis, Latin.] Hateful; detestable; accursed; abominable.

For us to change that which he hath established, they hold it execrable pride and presumption. Hooker.

Of the visible church of Jesus Christ those may be, in respect of their outward profession; who, in regard of their inward disposition, are most worthily both hateful in the sight of God himself, and in the eyes of the sounder parts of the visible church most execrable. Hooker.

Give sentence on this execrable wretch, That hath been breeder of these dire events. Tit. Andronicus.

When execrable Troy in ashes lay, Through fires, and swords, and seas they forc'd their way. Dryden, Æn.

EXECRABLY. adv. [from execrable.] Cursedly; abominably.

'Tis fustian all, 'tis execrably bad; But if they will be fools, must you be mad? Dryden, Pers.

TO EXECRATE. † v. a. [execrator, Latin.] To curse; to imprecate ill upon; to abominate.

As if mere plebeian noise, dust, clamour, credulity, and confidence were enough to make a goddess; or sufficient either to consecrate or execrate any thing as divine, or devilish. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handson, p. 156.

Extinction of some tyranny, by the indignation of a people, makes way for some form contrary to that which they lately execrated and detested. Temple.

EXECRATION. † n. s. [old Fr. execration.]

1. Curse; imprecation of evil.

Mischance and sorrow go along with you, And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps! — Cease, gentle queen, these execrations. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

For this we may thank Adam! but his thanks Shall be the execration. Milton, P. L.

The Indians, at naming the devil, did spit on the ground in token of execration. Stillington.

2. The object of execration.

They shall be an execration and an astonishment. Jer. xlv. 12.

EXECRATORY. † n. s. [from execrate.] A formulary of execrations.

The notice of the ceremony is very agreeable to the execratory which is now used by them; wherein they profoundly curse the Christians. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 179.

TO EXECUTE. † v. a. [execo, Latin.] To cut out; to cut away.

Were it not for the effusion of blood which would follow an execution, the liver might not only be executed, but its office supplied by the spleen and other parts. Harvey on Consumption.

EXECUTION. † n. s. [from execo.] The act of cutting out. See EXECUT; in the example to which, exec- tion occurs; but the words should be properly execut and execution.

TO EXECUTE. † v. a. [executer, old French; from exequor, Latin.]

1. To perform; to practise.

Against all the Gods of Egypt I will execute judgement.

Exod. xii. 12.

He casts into the balance the promise of a reward to such as should execute, and of punishment to such as should neglect their commission.

South.

2. To put in act; to do what is planned or determined.

Men may not devise laws, but are bound for ever to use and execute those which God hath delivered.

Hooker.

The government here is so regularly disposed, that it almost executes itself.

Swift.

Abalom pronounced sentence of death against his brother, and had it executed too.

Locke.

3. To put to death according to form of justice; to punish capitally.

Fitzosborn was executed under him, or discarded into a foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement.

Wotton, Char. of Kings of England.

Sir William Bretingham was executed for treason.

Davies.

O Tyburn, cou'dst thou reason and dispute,

Cou'dst thou but judge as well as execute,

How often wou'dst thou change the felon's doom,

And truss some stern chief justice in his room!

Dryden.

4. To put to death; to kill.

The treacherous Fastolfe wounds my peace,

Whom with my bare fists I would execute,

If I now had him.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

TO EXECUTE. † v. n. To perform the proper office.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city.

Sir J. Hayward.

EXECUTOR. † n. s. [from execute. This word is usually written executor, though Dr. Johnson has chosen to write it executer. Lat. executor. And so executorship, as in the example from Bacon.]

1. He that performs or executes any thing.

My sweet mistress

Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness

Had ne'er like executor.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

Sophocles and Euripides, in their most beautiful pieces, are impartial executors of poetick justice.

Dennis.

2. He that is intrusted to perform the will of a testator. In this sense the accent is on the second syllable.

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills;

And yet not so; for what can we bequeath?

Shakspeare.

3. An executioner; one who puts others to death.

Disused.

The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,

Delivers o'er to executors pale

The lazy yawning drone.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

EXECUTORSHIP. n. s. [from executor.] The office of him that is appointed to perform the will of the defunct.

As for fishing for testaments and executorships it is yet worse; by how much men submit themselves to meaner persons, than in service.

Bacon, Ess. of Riches.

EXECUTION. † n. s. [old Fr. execution.]

1. Performance; practice.

When things are conũ to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity.

Bacon, Essays.

I wish no better

Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it

In execution.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

I like thy counsel; and how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make known.

Shakspeare.

The excellency of the subject contributed much to the happiness of the execution.

Dryden.

2. The last act of the law in civil causes, by which possession is given of body or goods.

Sir Richard was committed to the Fleet in execution for the whole six thousand pounds.

Clarendon.

3. Capital punishment; death inflicted by forms of law.

Good rest.

—As wretches have o'er night,
That wait for execution in the morn.

Shakspeare.

I have seen,

When, after execution, judgement hath

Repented o'er his doom.

Shakspeare.

Laws support those crimes they check before,

And executions now affright no more.

Creech, Manlius.

4. Destruction; slaughter.

• Brave Macbeth, with his brandish'd steel,

Which smok'd with bloody execution,

Carv'd out his passage.

Shakspeare.

The execution had been too cruel, and far exceeding the bounds of ordinary hostility.

Hayward.

5. It is used with the verb do.

When the tongue is the weapon, a man may strike where he cannot reach, and a word shall do execution both further and deeper than the mightiest blow.

South.

Ships of such height and strength, that his vessels could do no execution upon them.

Arbutnot on Coins.

EXECUTIONER. n. s. [from execution.]

1. He that puts in act, or executes; in this sense executioner is now more used.

It is a comfort to the executioners of this office, when they consider that they cannot be guilty of oppression.

Bacon.

The heart of every man was in the hand of God, and he could have made them executioners of his wrath upon one another.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

In this case every man hath a right to punish the offender, and be the executioner of the law of nature.

Locke.

2. He that inflicts capital punishment; he that puts to death according to the sentence of the law.

He, born of the greatest blood, submitted himself to be servant to the executioner that should put to death Musidorus.

Sidney.

The deluge was not sent only as an executioner to mankind, but its prime errand was to reform the earth.

Woodward.

3. He that kills; he that murders.

Is not the causer of the timeless deaths,

As blameful as the executioner?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I would not be thy executioner:

I fly thee, for I would not injure thee;

Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eyes.

Shakspeare.

4. The instrument by which any thing is performed.

All along

The walls, abominable ornaments!

Are tools of wrath, anvils of torments hung,

Fell executioners of foul intents.

Crashaw.

EXECUTIVE. adj. [from execute.]

1. Having the quality of executing or performing.

They are the nimblest, agile, strongest instruments, fittest to be executive of the commands of the souls.

Hale.

2. Active; not deliberative; not legislative; having the power to put in act the laws.

The Roman emperours were possessed of the whole legislative as well as executive power.

Addison, Freeholder.

Hobbes confounds the executive with the legislative power, though all well instituted states have ever placed them in different hands.

Swift.

EXECUTOR.* See the second sense of EXECUTER.

EXECUTORSHIP.* See EXECUTERSHIP.

EXECUTORY.* adj. [Fr. executoire.]

1. Having authority to put the laws in force; exercising authority.

A vigilant and jealous eye over executory and judicial magistracy; an anxious care of publick money; an openness, approaching towards facility, to publick complaint; these seem to be the true characteristics of a house of commons.

Burke.

What person is a king to command executory service, who has no means whatsoever to reward it!

Burke.

2. [In law.] To be executed or performed at a future period.

Contingent or executory remainders are, where the estate is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event.

She is exemplarily loyal in a high exact obedience.

Howell.

2. In such a manner as may warn others.

Some he punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might from thence have a taste or glimpse of his future justice.

Hakewill on Providence.

If he had shut the commons house, whilst their champions were exemplarily punished, their jurisdiction would probably in a short time have been brought within the due limits.

Clarendon.

3. In proof.

These wild dogs, either by diversity of air, or soil, vary their species; as exemplarily we see in the Indian ounce, which is the product of an European cat. Sir T. Herbert, Thes. p. 124.

EXEMPLARINESS. n. s. [from exemplary.] State of standing as a pattern to be copied.

In Scripture we find several titles given to Christ, which import his exemplariness as of a prince and a captain, a master and a guide.

Tylotson.

EXEMPLARITY.* n. s. [from exemplary.] A pattern worthy of imitation; goodness.

Sincerity—and exemplarity—are the two things, whereby kings who are in age of government, and princes who are in years of discipline, are most advantaged.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 97.

Thou shalt escape better than any party of men by reason of thy conspicuous innocence, sincerity, and exemplarity of life.

More on the Seven Churches, p. 133.

Of some performances of our Saviour no other, or no so probable, an account can be given, as that they were done for exemplarity.

Barrow, Serm. vol. iii. §. 3.

EXEMPLARY.† adj. [from exemplar, Dr. Johnson says. And formerly exemplar itself was used as an adjective, as in Bishop Taylor's Life of Christ, edit. 1653, p. 519. "But such had been the excellency and exemplar piety and prudence of the life of Jesus, that if they pretended against him questions of their law, they were not capital in a Roman court." But this has not been regarded. The accent on exemplary is now usually on the first syllable, though Dr. Johnson has placed it on the second.]

1. Such as may deserve to be proposed to imitation, whether persons or things.

The archbishops and bishops have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth: their lives and doctrine ought to be exemplary.

Bacon.

If all these were exemplary in the conduct of their lives, religion would receive a mighty encouragement.

Swift.

2. Such as may give warning to others.

Had the tumults been repressed by exemplary justice, I had obtained all that I designed.

King Charles.

3. Such as may attract notice and imitation.

Awaking therefore, as who long had dream'd,
Much of my women and their gods ashamed,
From this abyss of exemplary vice

Resolv'd, as time might aid my thought, to rise.

Prior.

When any duty is fallen under a general disuse and neglect, in such a case the most visible and exemplary performance is required.

Rogers.

4. Illustrating as the proof of a thing.

Exemplary is the coat of George Villiers Duke of Buckingham; five scallop-shells on a plain cross, speaking his predecessors' valour in the holy war.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 271.

EXEMPLARY.* n. s. [Fr. exemplaire, "the copy of a writing," Cotgrave.] A copy of a book, or writing.

These latter words, which are evident to be seen in the Greek exemplaries, are faire and smoothly let alone out in the Latine translation.

Martin, Mark. of Priests, (1554,) sign. Ll. i.

Whereof doth it come, that the exemplaries and copies of many books do vary, but by such means?

Hunting of Purgatory, (1561,) fol. 322. b.

I will here insert the tenour and copy of the request made to the king by Demetrius, &c. The exemplary of Demetrius his request to the king was this: Great sir, Since it hath pleased you to give me commandment to search in all places for all manner of books, &c.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 29.

EXEMPLIFICATION. n. s. [from exemplify.] A copy; a transcript.

An ambassadour of Scotland demanded an exemplification of the articles of peace.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shakespeare, Othello.

EXHIBITIONER.* n. s. [from exhibition.] One, who in our English universities, receives a pension or allowance, bequeathed by benefactors for the encouragement of learning.

EXHIBITIVE.† adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

Exhibitive symbols of Christ's body and blood.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 4.

EXHIBITIVELY.* adv. [from exhibitive.] Representatively.

The trope lies in the verb "was," put for "signify," or "exhibitively signify." Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 12.

EXHIBITOR.* See EXHIBITER.

EXHIBITORY.* adj. [from exhibit.] Setting forth; shewing.

In an exhibitory bill, or schedule, of expences for their removal this year, as it seems, mention is made of carrying the clock from the college-hall to Garsington-house.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 379.

To EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,

That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd.

Milton, P. L.

Let them thank

Been nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts
Exhilarates their languid minds, within
The golden mean confin'd.

Philips.

To EXHILARATE.* v. n. To become glad.

EXI

The shining of the sun, whereby all things exhilarate, and do fructify, is either hindered by clouds above, or mists below.

Bacon, Speech in Parliament to the Speaker's Excuse.

EXHILARATION. n. s. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To EXHORT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. 1 Thess. iv. 1.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Designing or exhorting glorious war.

Milton, P. L.

EXHORT.* n. s. Exhortation. Not in use.

Urge those who stand, and those who faint excite;

Drown Hector's vaunts in loud exhorts of fight. Pope, Iliad, 12.

EXHORTATION. n. s. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Shakespeare.

EXHORTATIVE.* adj. [from exhort.] Containing exhortation.

Considering St. Paul's style and manner of expression in the preceptive and exhortative part of his epistles.

Barrow, Serm. 8.

EXHORTATORY.† adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

Cockeram, and Bullokar.

EXHORTER.† n. s. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

Huloet, and Barret.

A most devout exhorter, and a most earnest perswader.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) sign. A n. 4.

EXHUMATION.* n. s. [Fr. exhumation; low Lat. exhumatio, from ex, out, and humus, the ground.] The act of unburying, or removing out of the grave.

Mr. Flecquet says, in his collection of Tracts relative to the exhumation in the great church at Dunkirk, that the town became more healthy after the bodies of those who had been buried in it had been taken up. Seward's Anecd. v. 288.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Dict.

EXICCATION. n. s. [from exiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE.† } n. s. [This word is probably only EXIGENCY. } a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronounciation, Dr. Johnson says.
However it is the old French exigence.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real covenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.
This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and generosity. Broome.
Now in such exigencies not to need
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble opportunity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT.† n. s. [exigens, Lat.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.
In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Pref.
The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.
Prayer and fasting were his certain refuge in all exigents. Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for an extremity. Hanmer.

3. End.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Was dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakspeare.

EXIGENT.* adj. [Lat. exigens.] Pressing; requiring immediate aid.

At this exigent moment, the loss of a finished man is not easily supplied. Burke.

EXIGUITY.† n. s. [exiguitas, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness. Cockeram.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS.† adj. [exiguus, Lat.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used, Dr. Johnson says. But he had forgotten how aptly a modern poet has applied it.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours' time. Harvey.

Protected mice,
The race exiguous, unimur'd to wet,
Their mansions quit, and other countries seek. Philips, Fall of Chloe's Jordan.

EXILE.† n. s. [exilium, Lat.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would Jewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakspeare.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, saying, pent to linger
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
This mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

2. The person banished. [old French, exil.]
O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rolling years return? Dryden, Virg.
Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Dropt his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope, Odyssey.

TO EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.
Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fed the snakes of watchful tyranny.
Foul subordination is predominant.
And equity exil'd your highest land. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.
They fettered with the bonds of a long night, lay there
Exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.

His brutal manners from his breast
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fill'd. Dryden.
Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXILE.† adj. [old Fr. exile; from exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be devised to forth the exile heat, which is in the air, for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more sensible sound than when the lid is open. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EXILEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. exilement.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into a foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wolton, Char. of Kings of England.

EXILIATION. n. s. [exiliatio, Lat.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exiliatio; and powder, which is made of sulphre and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Bacon.

EXILITY.† n. s. [old Fr. exilite.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day; the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing. Greus.

EXIMIOUS.† adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Diet.

Who sees not that, in this first and principal mystery of our religion, the Holy Spirit is exhibited to us as a person; that about him, as such, this excellent part of our duty, this eximious worship is conversant. Barnes, Serm. i. 24.

TO EXINANITE.* v. a. [old Fr. exinaner, Lat. exinatio.] To make empty; to spoil; to weaken; to make of no force. So the word is defined in the enlarged edition of Bullokar; and it is also given in Cockeram's vocabulary. But Dr. Fulke, in 1617, places it among the words in the Rhemish translation of the N. Test. "as not familiar to the vulgar reader." Not now in use. Bishop Pearson applies exinanition to the following passage:

He exinanited himself, and took the form of a servant. Philipp. ii. 7. Rhemish Transl.

EXINANITION.† n. s. [exinanition, old Fr. exinanition, Lat.] Privation; loss; emptiness.

So wert thou, for the great work of our redemption, willing to be led from the mount Tabor to mount Calvary, from the height of that glory, to the lowest depth of sorrowful pain, exinanition. Ep. Hall, Myst. of Golgotha, 63.

Philoponus calls the habitate sinner, by retaining the gross habit of sin to a spareness and slenderness of stature, an exinanition of that carnal appetite which hath brought in all the grosser joys which hitherto we have fed on. Hammond, Works, i. 276.

If the assumption of the form of a servant be consistent with his exinanition; if that exinanition necessarily presupposeth a plenitude as indispensably antecedent to it, in the form of God be also coeval with that precedent plenitude, then must we confess, Christ was in the form of God, before he was in the form of a servant. Pearson on the Gospel, Art. 2.

Diseases of exinanition are more dangerous than diseases of repletion. Herbert, Colours, Para. vi. 26.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Lat.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

Our year is past, a different scene!

No further mention of the dead:

Who saw, alas, no more is lost

Than if he never did exist.

Swift.

EXISTENCE.† } n. s. [existentia, low Lat.]

EXISTENCY. } 1. State of being; actual possession of being.

Not only the existence of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existence, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul secur'd in her existence, smiles

At the death's danger, and defies its point.

Addison, Cato.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts, Logick.

2. A being.

It is a pleasant story that we forsooth, who are the only imperfect creatures in the universe, are the only beings that will not allow of imperfection. Somebody has taken notice, that we stand in the middle of existencies, and are by this one circumstance the most unhappy of all others. Tatler, No. 246.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTENTIAL.† adj. [from existent.] Having existence.

Enjoying the good of existence — and the being deprived of that existential good. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 483.

EXISTIMATION. n. s. [existimatio, Lat.]

1. Opinion.

2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. s. [exit, Lat.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.

2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players:

They have their exits and their entrances,

And one man in his time plays many parts. Shakespeare.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an exit either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXICIAL.† adj. [exitialis, Lat.] Destructive; fatal;

EXITIOUS. } mortal; deleterious. Not now in use.

To this end is come that beginning of setting up of images in churches, then judged harmless, in experience proved not only harmful, but exitious and pestilential. Homilies, against Idolatry, P. iii.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthraxes, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey on the Plague.

EXODE.† n. s. [Gr. ἐξόδος.] An interlude, or farce, at the end of a tragedy.

The Romans had three plays acted one after another, on the same subject; the first a real tragedy, the second the Apellase, the third a satire or exode, a kind of farce of one act. Rapin.

EXODUS.† n. s. [Exodus.] Departure; journey

EXODY. } from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The men of Hamel date all their publick matters especially, from this exodus, or going forth of the children, setting it down next to the year of our Lord. Gregory, Posthumus, p. 107.

EXOLUTE. adj. [exolutus, Latin.] Obsolete; out of use. Dict.

To EXOLVE. v. a. [exolvere, Latin.] To loose; to pay. Dict.

EXOLUTION.† n. s. [exolution, old Fr. "faintness," Cotgrave; exolutio, Latin.] Laxation of the nerves.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing that action in some, we cannot but think it much abridgeth our days. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXO'MPHALOS. n. s. [ἔξ and ἐμφαλῶ.] A navel rupture.

To EXONERATE. v. a. [exonero, Latin.] To unload; to disburden; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumscribed, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus. Ray.

EXONERATION. n. s. [from exonerate.] The act of disburdening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Grew.

EXO'NERATIVE.† adj. [from exonerate.] Freeing from any charge or burden.

EXO'PTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be sought with eagerness or desire.

EXORABLE.† adj. [exorabilis, Latin; exorable, old Fr. "exorable, fit or easy to be entreated," Cotgrave. Our word is also, in the old vocabularies of Bullokar and Cockeram, though Dr. Johnson has given it without producing any authority or example.] To be moved by intreaty.

I doubt too many of you will be too exorable in this point.

Harington, Apologie of Poetrie.

He was always exorable to offenders.

Bp. Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams.

To be patient, exorable, and reconcilable to those who give the greatest cause of offence. Barrow, Sermon. 1.

If you repent and turn to Him, He is so exorable and pitiful, that no tender parent hath more yearning bowels, or more open arms to receive his prodigal and lost son.

Goodman, Wint. Ec. Conf. p. 259.

To EXORATE.† v. a. [Lat. exoro.] To obtain by request. Cockeram.

EXORBITANCE.† } n. s. [from exorbitance, Fr.]

EXORBITANCY. } 1. The act of going out of the tract prescribed.

All these exorbitances in nature serve to fill and set off the general beauty and elegance of its works.

Spencer on Fœdiles, p. 133.

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

Bewail the lamentable exorbitances of their superstitions.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 31.

Curbing their wild exorbitance almost in the other extreme.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

I see some degree of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 40.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government.

Swift, on the Diss. in Athens and Rome.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,

Unbounded in exorbitance of ill.

Garth, Dispensary.

EXORBITANT.† adj. [exorbitant, old French; from ex and orbito, Latin.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.

2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

Once more I will renew

His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd

By sin to foul exorbitant desires.

Milton, P. L.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions?

L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews, who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.

Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.

Addison on Italy.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift.

EXORBITANTLY.* adv. [from exorbitant.] Beyond all bound or rule.

She—implored his grace not to think her so exorbitantly and vainly ambitious, to wish herself a queen.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 117.

The same court acting more exorbitantly, contrary to law.

Dr. Hoadly, Sermon 30th Jan. 1718, p. 26.

To EXORBITATE.† v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.]

To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

A wise intermixture of some irregularities puts men upon reflection, and gives them to understand, that Nature's ill-shaped letters at one time are an assurance, that she could not write so fairly and evenly as generally, had she not some Great Master to guide her hand, and bind in the power of some causes apt to exorbitate and fly out.

Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 122.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.

Bentley.

To EXORCISE.† v. a. [ἐξορκίζω, Gr. exorciser, Fr.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.

2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.

3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

I conjure thee, O thou creature of gallium, sulphur, &c. that thou be for our defence; and that thou be made a perpetual fumigation, exorcised, and consecrated to the safety of us!

Bp. Hall, (from the Treas. of Rom. Exorc.) Cā. of Cons. iii. 1.

And friars, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls.

Dryden.

EXORCISER.† n. s. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits. Improperly used by Shakspeare for one who raises spirits, as he also uses exorcist.

No exorciser harm thee,

Nor no witchcraft charm thee.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

EXORCISM.† n. s. [ἐξορκισμός, Gr. exorcisme, old Fr.]

The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms?

Shakspeare.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms.

Harvey.

EXORCIST.† n. s. [ἐξορκιστής, Gr. exorciste, old Fr.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, Exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits.

Acts, xix. 13.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make oration unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion!

Brown, Chr. Morale, iii. 6.

2. An enchanter; a conjurer. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up

My mortified spirit.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Is there no exorcist?

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real that I see?

Shakspeare, All's well.

EXORDIAL.* adj. [from exordium.] Introductory.

The greatest underweening of this life is to undervalue that, unto which this is but exordial, or a passage leading unto it.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

Prolixity of paragraph and length of sentence are peculiar to Milton. This is seen—in some of his exordial invocations in the Paradise Lost.

Warton, Pref. to Milton's Smaller Poems.

If the exordial verses of Homer be compared with the rest of the poem, they will not appear remarkable for plainness or simplicity, but rather eminently adorned and illuminated.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 158.

EXORDIUM.† n. s. [Latin. The Latin plural, exordia, is used by Lord Chesterfield: but exordiums have abundant and good authority.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Captain Boissus, you are a rank rascal, without more exordiums.

Beaumont and Fl. King and No King.

Nor will I thee detain

With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear,

With circumstance, and long exordiums here.

May, Virg.

I have been distasted at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums.

Addison on Medals.

EXORINATION.† n. s. [exornatio, Latin. First used in our language, perhaps, as a rhetorical expression. Wilson, in his Art of Rhetorick, published in 1553, calls exornation one of the four parts belonging to elocution.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

This exornation [amplification] was first devised and ordained to increase causes, and enrich the oration with words and sentences.

Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, (1577,) Sign. N. ii. b.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease.

Hooker.

Hyperbolical exornations, elegancies, &c. many much affect.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 12.

EXO'SSATED. adj. [exossatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Dict.

EXOSTO'SIS. n. s. [ix and ὄσσειν.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXOTERICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἑξωτερικός, external.]

EXOTERICK. } A term applied to the double doctrine of the ancient philosophers; the publick, or exoterick; the secret, or esoterick. It is also used, in opposition to acroamatical; as the French likewise use exoterique.

Aristotle was wont to divide his lectures and readings into acroamatical and exoterical. Some of them contained only choice matter, and they were read privately to a select auditory; others contained but ordinary stuff, and were promiscuously and in publick exposed to the hearing of all that would. Hales, Rem. p. 148.

EXOTERY.* n. s. [Gr. ἑξωτερικός.] What is obvious or common. See ESOTERY.

Reserving their esoterics for adepts, and dealing out esoterics only to the vulgar.

Note in Search's Freewill, &c. p. 172.

EXOTICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἑξωτερικός, Lat. exoticus.] Foreign; not domestick.

How many have we seen, and pitied, which have brought nothing from foreign countries but mis-shapen clothes, or exotical gestures, or new games, or affected lisping, or the diseases of the place, or (which is worst) the vices!

Bp. Hall, Lett. to the E. of Essex, Ep. 8.

Shall they, who have been trained up in so clear a light of the Gospel, begin to cast wanton eyes upon their [the papists'] glorious superstitions? and contrary to the laws of God, and our sovereign, throw to their exotical devotions?

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 31.

EXO'TICK.† adj. [ἑξωτικός, Gr. exotique, old French.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestick.*

Mr. Selden, the ornament of our nation for exotick learning.

 Bp. Morton, Episcop. Asserted, p. 51.*

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder, Elements of Speech.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn, Kalendar.

EXO'TICK. n. s. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy; and such as the gardeners call exoticks.

Addison, Guardian.

To EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.

2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Houell.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbutnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name

Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPANSE. n. s. [expansio, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issued from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as the expanse of heav'n.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Milton, P. L. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. s. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the roundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Latin.] Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPANSION.† n. s. [from expansio.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

And God said, let there be a firmament, [in the margin, expansion.] Genesis, i. 6.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension; which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore, Creation.

EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Ray on the Creation.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

EX PARTE.* [Latin.] Of the one part. A law term, signifying what is executed by one side only; and in common conversation sometimes applied to partial narrations, to what is related on one part only of the matter; as, we will not be guided in this affair by ex parte hearsay or evidence.

To EXPATiate.† v. n. [expatori, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

I have more expatiated in this campe than they did.

Ireland, New Year's Gift, (1549,) sign. F. 3. b.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison, Spect.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,

Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;

Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,

Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man;

A mighty maze! but not without a plan.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,

And walk delighted, and expatriate round. Pope Odyssey.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Dryden. Sprat thought otherwise.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

They were not allowed to expatiate, or amplify, or connect, specious arguments together. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 91.

EXPA'TIATOR.* n. s. [Lat. expatiator.] One who enlarges upon in language.

The person, intended by Montfaucon as an expatiator on the word "endovellicus," I presume is Thomas Reinesius.

Peyge, Anonym. p. 201.

TO EXPA'TRIATE.* v. a. [old French, expatrier, from ex, out, and patria, country, Latin.] To banish from one's native country; to leave it. This word, I think, is somewhere used by lord Chesterfield.

Lost in these desponding thoughts, Abeillard indulged the romantick wish of expatriating himself for ever.

Berington, Hist. of Ab. p. 187.

EXPATRIA'TION.* n. s. [old French, expatriation, "éloignement de l'endroit où l'on est né, bannissement volontaire ou forcé." Lacombe.] Banishment, voluntary or compulsory; emigration.

TO EXPE'CT.* v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord; thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end.

Jerem. xxix. 11.

We expected

Immediate dissolution.

Milton, P. L.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise

Expect with mortal pain.

Milton, P. L.

Good with bad

Expect to hear, supernal grace contending

With sinfulness of man.

Milton, P. L.

Eve, now expect great tidings.

Milton, P. L.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,

By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect

Their motion.

Milton, P. L.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd.

His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd.

Dryden.

False hopes

He cherishes; nor will his fruit expect

The autumnal season, but in summer's pride,

When other orchards smile, abortive fail. Philips, Cider, B. I.

TO EXPE'CT.* v. n. To wait; to stay. Dr. Johnson here cites a passage from the book of Job, which is a marginal reading, and which he has unwarrantably converted, from an active, into a neuter verb: for he has printed it, "Elihu had expected till Job had spoken;" but the true reading is "expected Job in words," Job, xxxii. 4. The poet, who has admirably paraphrased the book of Job, affords an example of the verb neuter.

I will expect until my change in death,

And answer at thy call: Thou wilt renew

What thou hast ruin'd, and my fears subdue.

Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, (1648,) p. 22.

EXPECTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPECTANCE. } n. s. [from expect.]

EXPECTANCY. }

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Satyrs leave your petulance,

Or else rail upon the moon,

Your expectance is too soon;

For before the second cock

Crow, the gates will not unlock.

B. Jonson, Fairy Prince.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme.

Boyle.

But fie, my wandering muse, how thou dost stray!

Expectance culls thee now another way. Milton, Vac. Exercise.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,

What further you will do.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!

The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

EXPECTANT.* adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.

Expectant aye till I may meet

To getten mercie of that sweet.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 4571.

If it be said that some parishes revera, have not curates, I answer that the supernumerary expectant clergy may balance that.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 276.

Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir.

Swift.

EXPECTANT.* n. s. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependance by his hopes.

Scribe was originally the distinctive title of a son of the prophets, and an expectant of that sacred function.

Spencer on Vulg. Proph. p. 36.

An expectant of future glory.

South, Serm. vi. 509.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,

My stores in riotous expence devour.

Pope, Odyssey.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants.

Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. s. [expectatio, Latin.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees

Should have borne men, and expectation fainted,

Longing for what it had not.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The rest,

That are within the note of expectation,

Already are i' th' court.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear.

Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth.

Rogers, Serm.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.

Ps. lxiii. 5.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,

What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,

Why our great expectation should be call'd

The Seed of woman.

Milton, P. L.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness.

Sidney.

You first came home

From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,

By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;

Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you.

Otway.

EXPECTATIVE.* adj. [Fr. expectatif.] Expecting.

Cotgrave.

EXPECTATIVE.* n. s. The object of expectation.

I am already abundantly satisfied in some expectations.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1618,) Rem. p. 486.

EXP

In the mean time the king conferred upon him as many ecclesiastical preferments, of a lower degree, as he could legally be possessed of; as marks of royal favour; and supports of his state and dignity, while this great expectative was depending.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 34.

EXPECTER. † n. s. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governours here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. The name of a sect who had no determinate religion.

Many have wrangled so long about the church, that at last they have quite lost it, and go under the name of Expecters and Seekers, and do deny that there is any true church, or any true minister, or any ordinances.

Pagitt, Hecreniography, (1654,) p. 128.

EXPECTORANTS.* n. s. Medicines which promote expectoration. See TO EXPECTORATE. Chambers.

TO EXPECTORATE. v. a. [ex and pector, Latin.]

To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey on Consumptions.

Morbifick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORATION. n. s. [from expectorate.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.

2. That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and straitens the breath.

Quincy.

With water, vinegar, and honey, in pleurisies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPECTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO EXPEDITE.* v. a. [old Fr. expedier.] To expedite; to dispatch. Obsolete. Cockeram.

Great alterations in some kind of merchandise may serve, for that present instant, to expediate their business.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

EXPEDIENCE. } n. s. [from expedient.]
EXPEDIENCY. }

1. Fitness; propriety: suitableness to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for expedition, as adventure; or attempt.

Let me hear —

What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

3. It is also used by Shakspeare for expedition, as haste; dispatch.

I shall break

The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

EXPEDIENT. † adj. [expedient, old French; expedit, Latin.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.

All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.

EXP

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson.

2. In Shakspeare, quick; expeditions.

The adverse winds,

Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:

His marches are expedient to this town. Shakspeare, K. John.

EXPEDIENT. † n. s. [expedient, n. s. old French.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end.

God does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;

Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryden.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes.

Woodward.

EXPEDIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.

2. Hastily; quickly; not used.

Let my officers of such a nature

Make an extort upon his house and lands:

Do this expediently, and turn him going.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

TO EXPEDITATE.* v. a. [low Lat. expedito, of ex, from, and pede, the foot.] To cut off the balls, or, as some say, certain claws of great dogs' feet, which are kept near a forest, that they may not harm the king's deer. The dogs so cut are said to be expeditated.

Bullockar.

In the forest laws, every one that keeps a great dog not expeditated, forfeits three shillings and four-pence to the king.

Chambers.

EXPEDITATION.* n. s. [low Lat. expeditatio.] In the forest laws, the mutilation of dogs' feet.

The king granted to him free chase and free warren, in all those his lands, both within and without the forest; also freedom from the expeditation of dogs. Ashmole, Berks. ii. p. 425.

TO EXPEDITE. v. a. [expedio, Latin.]

1. To facilitate; to free from impediment.

By sin and death a broad way now is pav'd,

To expedite your glorious march.

Milton, P. L.

2. To hasten; to quicken.

An inquisition would still be a further improvement, and would expedite the conversion of the Papists. Swift.

3. To dispatch; to issue from a publick office.

Though such charters be expedited of course, and as of right, yet they are varied by discretion. Bacon.

EXPEDITE. adj. [expeditus, Latin.]

1. Quick; hasty; soon performed.

Wholesome advice, and expedite execution, in freeing the state of those monsters. Sandys.

2. Easy; disencumbered; clear from impediments.

Nature can teach the church but in part; neither so fully as is requisite for man's salvation, nor so easily as to make the way plain and expedite enough, that many may come to the knowledge of it, and so be saved, and therefore the Scripture has been given. Hooker.

3. Nimble; active; agile.

The more any man's soul is cleansed from sensual lusts, the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. Tillotson.

4. It seems to be used by Bacon for light armed in the Roman signification.

He sent the lord chamberlain with expedite forces to speed to Exeter, to the rescue of the town. Bacon, Hen. VII.

EXPEDITELY. adv. [from expedite.] With quickness; readiness, haste.

Nature left his ears naked, that he may turn them most expeditely for the reception of sounds from every quarter. Grell.

EXP

EXPEDITION.† n. s. [expedition, old Fr.]

1. Haste; speed; activity.

Prayers, whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity; thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker.

Ev'n with the speediest expedition

I will dispatch him to the emperor's court. Shakespeare.

2. A march or voyage with martial intentions.

Young Octavius, and Mark Antony,

Come down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

EXPEDITIOUS.† adj. [from expedite.]

1. Speedy; quick; soon done: as, an expeditious march.

I'll deliver all;

And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,

And sail so expeditious, that shall catch

Your royal fleet far off.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

2. Nimble; quick; swift; acting with celerity: as, an expeditious runner.

EXPEDITIOUSLY. adv. [from expeditious.] Speedily; nimbly; with celerity.

EXPEDITIVE.* adj. [Fr. expeditif.] Performing with speed.

I mean not to purchase the praise of expeditive in that kind; but as one, that have a feeling of my duty: and of the case of others, my endeavour shall be to hear patiently.

Bacon, Speech on taking his Place in Chancery.

To EXPEL. v. a. [expello, Latin.]

1. To drive out; to force away.

The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight. Jos. xxiii. 5.

I may know the yet why gentle peace

Should not expel these inconveniences. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places, with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatsoever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other part of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The virgin huntress was not slow

To expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryden.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms, and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,

And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,

Expel'd and exil'd left the Trojan shore.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not poor fellowship expel,

Myself would offer you a company

In this adventurous chancel and jeopardy. Spenser, Hubb. Talc.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.

Since she did neglect her looking glass,

And threw her sun expelling mask away,

The air hath sturr'd the roses in her cheeks,

And pitch'd the tincture of her face.

Shakespeare.

Oh that that earth which kept the world in awe

Would patch a wall, expel the winter's flaw!

Shakespeare.

EXPELLER.† n. s. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

Unspotted faith, expeller of all vice,

And most undoubted argument to prove

A mind descended nobly.

Fauslauc, Trans. of Pastor Fido, p. 74.

EXPENSE.* See EXPENSE.

To EXPEND. v. a. [expendo, Latin.] To lay out; to spend.

If my death might make this island happy,

I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The king of England wasted the French king's country, and thereby caused him to expend such sums of money as exceeded the debt.

Hayward.

The public burthens, though they may be a good reason for our not expending so much in charity, yet will not justify us in giving nothing. Atterbury.

EXP

EXPENDITURE.* n. s. [from expend.] Cost; disbursement.

EXPENSE.† n. s. [low Latin, expensa, or expensum.] Our word, in the old vocabularies, is usually written expense, but not always so. And our old authors write it expence. See EXPENSEFUL, where the single example cited by Dr. Johnson from Wotton contains not expenseful, as he has given it, but expenceful. Costs; charges; money expended.

Hence comes that wild and vast expence,

That hath enforc'd Rome's virtue thence,

Which simple poverty first made.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

A feast prepar'd with riotous expence,

Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.

Dryden.

Such provision made, that a country should not want so many springs as were convenient, and afford a supply every where suitable to the necessities and expenses of each climate.

Woodward.

I can see no reason by which we were oblig'd to make those prodigious expenses.

Swift.

EXPENSEFUL.† adj. [expense and full.] Costly; chargeable; expensive.

Who will be troubled with a pettish girl?

I may be proud; and; to that vice, expenceful.

Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

No part of structure is either more expenceful than windows or more ruinous.

Wotton, Architectur.

EXPENSEFULLY.* adv. [from expenceful.] In a costly way; at great charge.

Where now is seen, saith Camden, the fair habitation of Sir William Sidley, a learned knight, painfully and expencefully studious of the common good of his country.

Weever, Fun. Mon. p. 316.

EXPENSELESS. adj. [from expense.] Without cost.

A physician may save any army by this frugal and expenseless means only.

Milton on Education.

What health promotes, and gives unenvy'd peace,

Is all expenseless, and procur'd with ease.

Blackmore.

EXPENSIVE. adj. [from expense.]

1. Given to expense; extravagant; luxurious.

Frugal and industrious men are friendly to the established government, as the idle and expensive are dangerous.

Temple.

2. Costly; requiring expense: as, expensive dress; an expensive journey.

3. Liberal; generous; distributive.

This requires an active, expensive, indefatigable goodness, such as our apostle calls a work and labour of love.

Sprat.

EXPENSIVELY.† adv. [from expensive.] With great expense: at great charge.

You know our court took the resolution, that it was the best way to dispatch the French prince back again quickly, to receive him solemnly, ceremoniously, and expensively, when he hoped a domestick and durable entertainment.

Donne, Letter in his Poems, p. 279.

I never knew him live so great and expensively as he hath done since his return from exile.

Swift.

EXPENSIVENESS.† n. s. [from expensive.]

1. Addiction to expense; extravagance.

The courtiers studied to please the king's taste; and gave into an expensiveness of equipage and dress, that exceeded all bounds.

Louth, Life of Wykeham, p. 203.

2. Costliness.

Their highways, for their extent, solidity, or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire.

Arbutnot on Coins.

EXPERIENCE.† n. s. [old French, experience; from experientia, Latin.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden.

Raleigh.

EXP

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom, what is more is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. * Milton, P. L.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakespeare.
Ordinarily all proverbs are very true, being certain brief sentences collected out of long and discreet experiences.

Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 101.

Experience is the daughter of Time.

Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 104.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

To EXPERIENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to practise.

2. To know by practice.

He through the armed files
Darts his experience'd eye. Milton, P. L.

EXPERIENCED. part. adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species: or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wise by long practice.

To him experience'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend, what sorrows dost thou bring to mind. Pope.

EXPERIENCER. n. s. One who makes trials; a practitioner of experiments.

A curious experienter did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, till he be dazzled by it, even after he shall have turned his eyes from it.

Digby on Bodies.

EXPERIENT.* adj. [Lat. experiens.] Having experience; knowing the world.

Why is the prince, now ripe, and full experient,
Not made a doer in the state?

Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

EXPERIMENT.† n. s. [experiment, old Fr. experimentum, Latin.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Houker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know
How little weight with thee my words can find. Milton, P. L.

Till his full man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin;
or at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South, Serm.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts on the Mind.

To EXPERIMENT.† v. a. [experimenter, old French.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

This naptha is an oily or fat liquid substance, in colour not unlike soft white clay; of quality hot and dry, so as it is apt to inflame with the sun beams, or heat that issues from fire; as was mirthfully experimented upon one of Alexander's pages, who, being anointed, with much ado escaped burning.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.

2. To know by experience.

These and many other spiritual wickednesses in high places both the parson fear, or experiment, or both.

Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 9.

EXP

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

To EXPERIMENT.* v. n. To make experiment.

Francisco Redi experimented, that no putrefied flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any.

Ray on the Creation.

EXPERIMENTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

1. Pertaining to experiment.

2. Built upon experiment; formed by observation.

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,

Which with experimental seal do warrant

The tenour of my book. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.

Newton, Opticks.

These are so far from being subservient to atheists in their audacious attempts, that they rather afford an experimental confirmation of the universal deluge. Bentley, Serm.

EXPERIMENTALIST.* n. s. [from experimental.] One who makes experiments.

It was usual, we are told, with the experimentalists in physics in the last age, to labour their experiments with the most diligent exactness.

Burgess on the Divinity of Christ, (1790.) p. 24.

EXPERIMENTALLY.† adv. [from experimental.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

Solid divines experimentally know what belongs to the healing of a sinful soul. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 110.

While Pharos was an isle, the true distance between it and the city, as it hath been usually and experimentally accounted, was about seven furlongs. Gregory, Posthuma, p. 29.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations.

Baelyn, Kalender.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers, Serm.

EXPERIMENTER.† n. s. [from experiment.] One who makes experiment.

Galileus and Morsennus, two exact experimenters, do think they find this verity by their experiences; but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby on Bodies.

There will be no fear that the experimenter should reject the first, seeing they may be conceived by the meanest capacity. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 353.

EXPERT.† adj. [old Fr. expert; Lat. expertus.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,

Placing therein some expert officers. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Again fair Alma sits confest,

On Florimel's experter breast;

When she the rising sign constrains,

And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in the Æmilian square,

Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;

Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,

Able to express the parts, but not dispose the whole. Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says. But may not the preceding definitions be referred to this?

Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in, Dr. Johnson says. Expert of appears to be an ancient phrase for experienced in.

EXP

This excellent woman — being after experte of the paynes of bearing of children.

Ld. Morley, Transl. of Boccaccio, temp. H. 8. in Waldron's Tracts.

Thy dawning bloom,

Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,

The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state. Pope, Odyssey.

To EXPERT. * v. a. To experience. Not now in use.

We deem of death as doom of ill desert;

But knew we, fools, what it us brings until,

Die would we daily, once it to expert!

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

EXPERTLY. † adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner. Julioet, and Sherwood.

EXPERTNESS. n. s. [from expert.] Skill; readiness;
dexterity.

What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expert- ness in war. Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knolles, Hist.

EXPERTIBLE. * adj. [Lat. expetibilis.] To be wished for, or desired.

Uniformity in religious and ecclesiastical matters sure is so excellent and desirable a gain, that certainly an establishment, somewhat less perfect, with "being of the same mind as far as we have attained," and with a regular and effectual observation of good laws, is more expetible than an appointment in some circumstances more perfect, without the same uniform order and peace therewith.

Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 410.

EXPIABLE. † adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated, or atoned.

Did not the accidents of the holiest child-bed carry in them an expiable impurity?

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 112.

The church of Rome, is not so highly severe. Some sins they can allow to be but venial; such as oblige not man to the punishment of eternal death: which indeed is a life endless, in endless torment. But yet they allow them to be such as deserve punishment, though such as are easily pardonable: remissible of course, or expiable by an easie penitence.

Feltham, Res. ix. p. 274.

To EXPIATE. v. a. [expio, Latin.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atone-

2. To avert the threats of prodigies. .

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness by a more careful managery for the future. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXPIATION. † n. s. [old Fr. expiation.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

The land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, [in the margin, there can be no expiation for the land.]

Numbers, xxxv. 33.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats.

Milton, P. L.

EXP

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison, Spect.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices.

Hayward.

EXPIATORY. † adj. [old Fr. expiatoire.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

A real and expiatory offering and oblation.

Harmer, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1737), p. 81.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker.

EXPIATION. † n. s. [expilatio, Latin.] Robbery;
the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir; "pillage." Cockerdm.

EXPIRATION. † n. s. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast.

Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

Though therefore it be certainly true that Christ did truly and properly die, as other men are wont to do, and that after expiration he was in the state or condition of the dead, as some have learned to speak; yet the creed had spoken as much as this before, when it delivered that he was dead.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration.

Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

By the expiration of such atoms, the dog finds the scent as he hunts. Howell, Lett. iv. 50.

He was to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, in transientness and sudden expiration.

Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPIRE. † v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Spenser, F. Q.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden, Ovid.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

E X P

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser. But surely it is still usual to say, "the time is almost expired;" or, "the agreement is expired." And other writers, beside Spenser, use expire in this sense.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels.

Spenser, Hubb, Pale.

My mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels, and expire the term
Of a despised life. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Death was umpire by expiring the best spirit of the one, the quarrel being only for the lie given. Selden, Duello, ch. 4.

TO EXPIRE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly dies. Watson, Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linestocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires;
The vigorous scaman every porthole pries,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shakspeare.

EXPISCATION.* n. s. [Lat. ex and piscatio.] A fishing. See PISCATION.

In expiscation of whose mysteries,
Our nets must still be clogg'd with heavy lead
To make them sink and catch.

Chapman on B. Jonson's Sejanus.

TO EXPLAIN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away.
Ayliff, Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLAINABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLAINER.† n. s. [from explain.] Expositor; interpreter; commentator.

According to our common explainers.
Milton, Doct. and Discipl. of Divorce.

As there is no author who more frequently repeats similar sentiments and expressions than Arrian, so for that reason there is no one who is a better commentator and explainer
to himself.

Harris to Upton, (1734), in Dr. Warton's Works, p. 207.
Here we behold the rise of a second race of critics, the tribe of scholastic commentators, and explainers.
Harris, Philolog. Inquiries.

EXPLANATION. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.
Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLANATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETION.* n. s. [Lat. expletio.] Accomplishment.

They conduce nothing at all to the perfection of men's natures, nor the expletion of their desires.

Killingbeck's Serm. p. 374.

EXPLETIVE.† n. s. [expletif, old Fr. expletivum, Lat.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join.

Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future refinements may explode did and does.

Pope.

EXPLETORY.* adj. [Lat. expletus.] Filling up; taking up room.

In the address of the Almighty to Job, in chapters 38, 39, no less than twenty-one verses begin with the particle what, decorated with a note of admiration! No less than six successive verses in ch. 38, and four in ch. 39, have this uncouth introduction, for which there is not the smallest authority in the original. Dr. Garden is so fond of this expletory embellishment, as even to introduce it twice in the same verse.

Brit. Crit. 1797, Feb.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicare.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

TO EXPLICATE.† v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

I name him a grammarian by the authority of Quintilian, that, speaking Latin elegantly, can expound good authors, expressing the invention and disposition of the matter, their style or form of eloquence; explicating the figures as well of sentences as of words; leaving nothing, person or place, named by the author, undeclared or hid from his scholars.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 51.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament.

Bp. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satire is not yet sufficiently explicated.
Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. s. [from explicare.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing, by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein.

Hooker.

Many things are needed for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicare.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as, every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts, Logic.

EXPLICATOR. n. s. [from explicare.] An expounder; interpreter; explainer. Sherwood.

EXPLICATORY. adj. [from explicare.] Explicative; tending to explain.

Hereon are grounded those evangelical commands, explicatory of this law, as it now standeth in force.

Barrow, Sermon, vol. i. S. 25.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South, Sermon.

EXPLICIT. n. s. [Latin.] A word found at the conclusion of our old books, signifying the end, or it is finished; as we now find fnis. Thus the Liber Festivalis of Caxton concludes with "Explicit: Enprynted at Westmynster, &c. mccccxxxij." The old French books have the same word.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposal; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [from explicit.] The state of being explicit. Ash.

To EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Lat.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young

Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence

Thus was the applause they meant,

Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to chame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton, P. L.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins, Dædalus.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode

The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLODER. n. s. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

According to the republican divinity of some scandalous exploders of the doctrine of passive obedience. South, Sermon, vi. 276.

This age hath produced too many confident exploders of immaterial substances. Hallywell, Melampyr, p. 3.

EXPLOIT. n. s. [exploit, old French substantive; but the verb was expleiter, whence Chaucer took expleite for to perform. Lat. expletum, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold

Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;

But mine it will that no exploit have dont. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

How shall I relate

To human sense th' invisible exploits

Of warring spirits? Milton, P. L.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting hents;

Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

The exploits of wicked spirits upon particular persons may be permitted for diverse good purposes. Hallywell, Melampyr, p. 52.

Will you thus dishonour

Your past exploits, and sully all your wars! Addison, Cato.

To EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform;

to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden, Remains.

EXPLOITABLE. adj. [old Fr. exploitable.] Capable of being achieved. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXPLOITURE. n. s. [old Fr. exploit.] Achievement. Obsolete.

The commentaries of Julius Cæsar, which he made of his exploiture in France and Britaine.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 33. b.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLORATION. n. s. [from explore.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. s. [from explore; old Fr. explorateur.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

Percy, their explorator, was let out like a raven, and sent as a spy to descry, by the best inducements he could find, whether the state took hold of their proceedings or not. Proceedings against Garnet, (1606.) sign. Bbb. 3.

This envious explorator, or searcher for faults. Hallywell, Melampyr, p. 52.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explore.] Searching; examining.

This is but an exploratory purpose between us. Wotton, Rem. p. 507.

There is an exploratory temptation, to search out and discover what is in man, what his graces and corruptions are. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 123.

Round the castle, was an exploratory post to the Alchemah-street. Warton, Hist. of Kiddingington, p. 53.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood

Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,

And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milton, P. L.

Diverse opinions I have been inclined to question, not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden, Æn.
The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mæonian star.

Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

EXPLOREMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.
The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLOSION. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton, Opticks.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE. † adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

From the red abyss
New hills explosive thrown. Thomson, Liberty.

EXPOLIATION.  n. s.* [Lat. expoliatio.] A spoiling or wasting.

New, even now, O Saviour, art thou entering into those dreadful lists, and now art thou grappling with thy last enemy; as if thou hadst not suffered till now, now thy bloody passion begins: a cruel expoliation begins that violence.

Bp. Hall, Contemp. B. 4.

TO EXPOLISH.  v. a. [Lat. expolio.] To polish exquisitely.

To strive, where nothing is amiss, to mend;
To polish and expolish, paint and stain,
Unguents to daub, and then wipe out again.

Heywood, Hist. of Women, (1624.)

EXPONENT. † n. s. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

We may often observe that the exponents of fluxions or notes representing fluxions are confounded with the fluxions themselves. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 45.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.

Bacon, Ess. Civil and Moral.

Edward III., by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandize, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand.

Addison, Freeholder.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXPORT. † n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

Whether there should not be published, yearly, schedules of our trade, containing an account of the imports and exports of the year? Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 179.

EXPORTABLE.  adj.* [from export.] Which may be exported; as, exportable goods.

EXPORTATION. † n. s. [from export.]

1. The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

2. Simply, the act of carrying out. Neither this, nor the following sense, is noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The symptom, last spoken of, had reference to the instruments of the vital faculty, which serve for importation and reception of the blood and spirits; this, that we are now speaking to, hath reference to those which serve for exportation and rejection of the same.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 239.

3. The state of being carried out.

They were wont to sit by it, [the corpse,] from the time of its death till its exportation to the grave.

Bourne, Antiq. of the Comm. People, (1725,) p. 15.

EXPORTER. n. s. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Luoke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum. Lat. exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,

And shew Heaven just.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Who here

Will envy whom the highest place exposes

Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim?

Milton, P. L.

To pass the riper period of his age,

Acting his part upon a crowded stage,

To lasting toils expo'd, and endless cares,

To open dangers, and to secret snares.

Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;

For as he lov'd her equal to his life,

He would not to the seas expose his wife.

Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,

And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;

Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,

And while the balmy western spirit blows,

Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose.

Dryden, Virg.

E X P

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison, Spect.

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test; and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops began to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison, Spect.

EXPOSER.* n. s. [from expose; old Fr. exposeur.]

1. An explainer; an interpreter. Cotgrave.
2. One who lays things or persons open to contempt or ridicule.

EXPOSITION.* n. s. [old Fr. exposition.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbuthnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation; [from expound, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, if better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most sound. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITIVE.* adj. [from expose.] Explanatory; containing exposition.

The opinion of Durandus is to be rejected, as not expositive of the Creed's confession. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

EXPOSITOR. n. s. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakspeare.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgement or affliction. South, Sermon.

Scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

EXPOSITORY.* adj. [from expositor.] Explanatory.

This book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers. Johnson, Pref. to his Abridged Dictionary.

To EXPOSTULATE. n. s. [expostulatio, Latin.] To canvass with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

To EXPOSTULATE.* v. a. To discuss; to enquire into; to examining.

I cannot now stay to expostulate the case with them.

Asheton's Danger of Hypocrisy, (1673,) p. 17.
If either of us had intelligence that an enemy were coming upon us, with a design to assault us, and take away our life, although it were a person of but ordinary reputation that brought us the news, yet it would startle us, and we should not stand disputing the truth of the relation, but presently either prepare ourselves to appease him, or arm ourselves to encounter him; and then, if no enemy appeared, we could securely expostulate the false alarm afterwards.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 183.

EXPOSTULATION. n. s. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could Nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerably in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. s. [from expostulate.] One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY.* adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This table is a kind of an expostulatory debate between Bounty and Ingratitude. L'Estrange.

I confess with shame, it was an unpardonable omission to proceed so far as I have already done, before I had performed the due discourses, expostulatory, supplicatory, or deprecatory, with my good lords the critics. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 3.

She writ him a short expostulatory letter, worthy of herself. Welwood, Mem. p. 14.

EXPOSURE. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Theristes
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Boetlyn.

To EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

But ill expression sometimes gives alloy
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay.

Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions.

Broome.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

Shakespeare's energy does not arise so much from these old expressions, (most of which were not old in his time,) but from his artificial management of them.

Mason, Life of Gray.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press. [old Fr. expression.]

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste.

 Arbuthnot on Aliments.*

EXPRESSIVE. adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,

And every tear in lines so mournful flows,

We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,

O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live.

Tickell.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,

Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r.

Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgement of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances.

Rogers.

EXPRESSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS. n. s. [from expressive.] The power of expression or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius.

Addison.

EXPRESSLY. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular.

Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in Scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gather'd.

Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,

Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

Shakespeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop.

Stillingfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument.

Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion.

Rogers.

EXPRESSNESS. n. s. [from express.] The power of expression.

The terms of the question want somewhat of expressness.

Hammond, Works, i. 709.

Considering the expressness of all these places, I cannot see but that any duty of religion may be more easily evaded than this.

Glanville, Sermon. ii. p. 100.

EXPRESSURE. n. s. [from express.] Now disused in all its meanings.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,

Which hath an operation more divine,

Than breath or pen can give expressure to.

Shakespeare.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,

Like to the garter-compass in a ring:

The expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see.

Shakespeare.

To EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro, Lat.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks! now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper.

Brown.

EXPROBRATION. n. s. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief.

Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead.

Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery.

South, Sermon.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false

Of cowardice: the military mound

The British files transcend in evil hour

For their proud foes.

Philips.

EXPROBRATIVE. adj. [from exprobrate.] Reproaching; upbraiding.

All benefits losing much of their splendour, both in the giver and receiver, that do bear with them an exprobrative term of necessity.

Sir A. Sherley's Travels.

To EXPROPRIATE. † v. a. [old French; expropri; from ex and proprius, Lat.] The word was not coined by Boyle, as the example, given by Dr. Johnson, might lead the reader to suppose; for expropriated had, long before Boyle wrote, been used by Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not now in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will.

Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EXPROPRIATION. n. s. [from expropriate.] The act of making no longer our own.

The soul of man, then, is capable of a state of much peace and equanimity in all exterior bands and agitations; but this capacity is rather an effect of the expropriation of our reason, than a virtue resulting from her single capacity; for it is the evacuation of all self-sufficiency that attracteth a replenishment from that Divine plenitude, from whose "fulness we receive grace for grace." So that it is a supervenient gift, not a native graft in our reason. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648.) p. 342.

To EXPUGN. † v. a. [expugner, old Fr. expugno, Lat.] To conquer; to take by assault.

They suborned certain men, which, when they could not expugn him by arguments and disputation, should by entreaty, and fair promises, or any other means, allure him to recantation.

Fox, (Acts and Monuments,) of Abp. Cranmer.

These ten voices were united in one sound, that their conjoined forces might expugn that gracious ear.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Great cities once expugned, the corps and villages will soon come in of themselves.

Fulham, Res. xiii. 33.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXPULSION.† n. s. [old Fr. expulsion.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,

More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,

Milton, P. L.

Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd.

Others think it possible so to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel. Wilkins, Dædalus.

This magnificent temple was not finished till after the expulsion of Tarquin. Stillingfleet.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstructing matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into Paradise, after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise? Raleigh, Hist.

EXPULSIVE. adj. [from expulse.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up, and placing it equal with or higher than the rest of the body, the influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages. Wiseman, Surgery.

EXPUNCTION.† n. s. [from expunge.] Abolition; the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

This work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the commonwealth of learning be not damnified. Milton, Arcopagitica.

To EXPUNGE.† v. a. [expungo, Lat.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

A universal blank

Of nature's works to me expung'd and ras'd.

Milton, P. L.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it. Arbuthnot.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
Thy balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence?

Sandys, Job, p. 13.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dress,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come!

Pope.

EXQ

EXPURGING.* n. s. [from expurge.] The act of blotting out.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expurgings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

Nothing can argue guiltiness so much as unjust expurgations.

Bp. Hall, Epist. Dec. ii. Ep. 3.

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown, Pref. to Vulg. Err.

This work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the commonwealth and learning be not damnified. Milton, Arcopagitica.

EXPURGATOR.† n. s. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.

Lord Digby.

We cannot wonder if these practices had a great share in the motives to the conversion of Henricus Boxhornius, who before was one of the principal expurgators. For some time these Indices Expurgatorii were a great mystery.

Jenkins, Hist. Ex. of Councils, p. 6.

EXPURGATORIOUS.* adj. [Lat. expurgatorius.] Expunging. See EXPURGATORY.

It were hard if the freeborn people of England, with whom the voice of truth for these many years, even against the proverb, hath not been heard but in corners, after all your monkish prohibitions, and expurgatorious indexes, your gags and snaffles. Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

EXPURGATORY.† adj. [expurgatorius, Latin.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Spanish Inquisitors, in their expurgatory index, commanded that all that Luciferian exorcism be blotted out.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold he brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glitt'ring spoil his horse adorn'd. Dryden.

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill as the music is good. Addison on Italy.

EXQUISITENESS. † n. s. [from exquisite.] Nicety; perfection.

A discourse which passes through the ear well, and seems to carry a good show of exquisiteness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 51.

Nor do we find, that in the great pomp or princely parade used by queen Berenice and her train of women, (among whom, no doubt, all the Roman and Asiatick fashions of improved beauty did appear, as St. Luke intimates) we find not, the blessed apostle, either at all taken, or scandalized with that exquisiteness and glory. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handloom. p. 82.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

EXQUISITIVE.* adj. [Lat. exquisitus.] Curious. See EXQUISITIVELY.

EXQUISITIVELY.* adv. Curiously; minutely.

EXSUFFLATION. † n. s. [from ex and sufflo, Latin.]

1. A blast working underneath.

Of volatility the utmost degree is when it will fly away without returning: the next is when it will fly up, but with ease return: the next is when it will fly upwards over the helm, by a kind of exsufflation, without vapouring. Bacon.

2. A kind of exorcism. [low Latin, exsufflatio.] See EXSUFFOLATE.

He urged them with exorcism and exsufflation, which were there used in the church. Fulke's Retentive, (1580,) p. 40.

That wondrous number of ceremonies in exorcism, exsufflation, use of salt, spittle, inunction, &c. in the church of Rome required. Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 282.

EXSUFFPLICATE.* adj. See EXSUFFFOLATE. But exsufflicate is the true word.

EXSUFFFOLATE. † adj. A word peculiar to Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says; making it a verb, where, if the word were really the poet's, it is in truth an adjective; and defining it, with Sir T. Hamner, from the Italian suffolare, to whisper; to buzz in the ear; further observing, in a note on the passage in his edition of Shakspeare, that the allusion, where the word occurs, is to a bubble, and therefore assigning the sense of empty to exsuffolate, which, after all, is an alteration of exsufflicate made by Hamner; and which Mr. Malone interprets by swollen. It seems to me, that all the critics have overlooked the meaning of the passage. Exsufflicate may be traced to the low Latin exsufflare, to spit down upon, an ancient form of exorcising; and figuratively, to spit out in abhorrence or contempt. See Du Cange in V. EXSUFFFLARE. Exsufflicate may thus signify contemptible; and Othello may be supposed to mean, that he would not change the noble design that then employed his thoughts for contemptible and despicable surmises.

Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the whippers of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. Shakspeare, Othello.

To EXCITATE. v. a. [excitare, Latin.] To rouse up; to stir up. Dict.

EXCITATION. n. s. [excitatio, Lat.] A stirring up; an awakening.

Virtue is not a thing that is merely acquired, and transfused into us from without, but rather an excitation and raising up of those intellectual principles, pro re nata, and according as the circumstances of human actions invite, which were essentially engraven and sealed upon the soul at her first creation.

Hallywell, Essay of Mor. Virtue, (1692) p. 54.

EXTANCE. n. s. [from extant.] Outward existence.

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, he must answer who asked it; who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unborn; who hath in his intellect the ideal existences of things and entities before their estances. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

EXTANCY. n. s. [Lat. extantia.]

1. The state of rising above the rest.

2. Parts rising up above the rest; in opposition to those depressed.

The order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions, will be altered likewise. Boyle on Colours.

EXTANT. adj. [extant, old French; extans, Latin.]

1. Standing out to view; standing above the rest.

That part of the teeth which is extant above the gums is naked, and not invested with that sensible membrane called periosteum, wherewith the other bones are covered. Ray.

If a body have part of it extant and part of it immersed in fluid, then so much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part shall be equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.

2. Publick; not suppressed.

'Tis extant, that that which we call comœdia, was at first nothing but a simple, continued song.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

The first of the continued weekly bills of mortality, extant at the parish clerks hall, begins the twenty-ninth of December 1603.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

EXTA'TICAL. adj. [εξωτικός, Gr. extatique, French.]

EXTA'TICK. } See ECSTATICAL.]

1. Tending to something external.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatical love, which continually carries me to good without myself. Norris.

2. Rapturous; in a state in which the soul seems to leave the body.

Some reduce enthusiasts, ecstatical and demoniacal persons, to this rank. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 36.

The dithyrambus was a kind of ecstatic morrice-dance.

Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 4.

Not one of those sanctified philosophers but had dreams, visions, and ecstatic colloquies with demons every night.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 43.

In ecstasy ecstatic may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

EXTASY. n. s. [εκστασις.] See ECSTASY. Spenser once uses this word in the sense of sudden surprize.

She that reboyl'd; that whil't the gods

Were troubled, and amongst themselves at odds,
Before they could new counsels re-allie,

To set upon them in that ecstasy. Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 23.

To EXTRAY. v. a. To overcome with joy. See To ECSTASY.

From ecstasy.

Were you witness for me now? Is it possible
I am what she affirms, true Lover?

Shelton and M. The Coronation.

Our spirits are extrayed with the agonies and contemplation of thy beauty. Shelton, Sermon p. 11.

EXTRAYED. adj. [extrayatus, Latin.]

1. Uttered without premeditation; quick; ready; sudden.

Alcidemus the sophister bath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech.

Hooker.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, of good extemporal judgement and discourse, for the satisfying of publick ministers. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

2. Speaking without premeditation.

Many foolish things fall from wise men, if they speak in haste, or be extemporal. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

EXTEMPORALLY. adv. [from extemporal.] Quickly; without premeditation.

The quick comedians

Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

EXTEMPOREAN. adj. [Lat. extemporaneus.] Unpremeditated. Now extemporaneus.

Extemporaneus style, tautologies, apish imitation.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

EXTEMPORENEOUS. adj. [extemporaneus, Latin.] Unpremeditated; sudden.

By working of miracles is meant a more private and extemporaneus exercise of the same power.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace.

The extemporaneus effusions of the glowing bard seem naturally to have fallen into this measure, and it was probably more easily suited to the voice or harp.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry i. Diss. 1. c. 4. b.

EXTEMPORARY. adj. [extemporaneus, Latin.]

1. Uttered or performed without premeditation; sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of shewing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject.

More, Divine Dialogues.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility.

Glennville.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives. Swift.

2. Occasional; for the time. A sense not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

A third shall be, by referring you to the most extemporary view of the commands of the decalogue, which Christ came not to destroy, but to fill up and perfect.

Hammond, Works, iv. p. 480.

It may be wondered what should induce the people to build in this base manner, when they have, in the adjacent mountains, such plenty of good stone for nobler fabricks. I can give no reason for it, unless this may pass for such; that those who first planted here, finding so delicious a situation, were in haste to come to the enjoyment of it; and therefore nimbly set up those extemporary habitations, being unwilling to defer their pleasure so long, as whilst they might erect more magnificent structures; which primitive example their successors have followed ever since.

Mandrell's Journey, p. 25.

EXTEMPORE. adv. [extempore, Latin.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring. Shakespeare.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how sottish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity?

South, Sermons.

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?

Or, like a boy, pursue at the cartion-ord
With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,
A fruitless toil, and fruitless extempore?

Dryden, Pers.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly, Dr. Johnson says, citing this usage of it only by Addison. Dryden has also used it.

A sort of extempore poetry, or rather of tempest lightning verse.

Dryden, Crit. and Prag. of Satire.

I have known a woman launch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a parrot.

3. It is also sometimes used as a substantive, which escaped Dr. Johnson's notice.

E X T

Amidst the disadvantage of extempore against premeditation, he dispelled with ease and perfect clearness all the sophisms that had been brought against him. Fell, Life of Hammond.

EXTEMPORINESS. n. s. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unpremeditated.

To EXTEMPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer. South, Sermon ii. 117.

To EXTEND. † v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out in any direction.

If those pieces were extended and stretched out in man, as they are in the world, man would be the giant and the world the dwarf, the world but the map and the man the world. Donne, Dev. (1624), p. 65.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old sire, his helpless hand extend. Dryden, Virgil.
Should ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To amplify: opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not. Locke.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge. Locke.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain; °
You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo the whole dispute is ended. Prior.

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign Hermione t' extend the regal line. Pope, Odyssey.

7. To encrease in force or duration.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:
Feed and regard him not. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The eyes of Tobit, carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extendeth farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous? Hooker.

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him. Psalms cix. 12.

10. To seize by a course of law.

This manor is extended to my use.
Massinger, New Way to pay Old Debts.

The law, that settles all you do,
And marries where you did but woo;
And if it judge upon your side,
Will soon extend her for your bride;
And put her person, goods or lands,
Or which you like best, in your hands. Hudibras.

To EXTEND. v. n. To reach to any distance.

My goodness extends not to thee. Psalms xvi. 2.
The bigness of such a church might be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend. Graunt.

E X T

EXTENDER. † n. s. [from extend.] The person, thing, or instrument by which any thing is moved or extended.

Those muscles which are inserted into the thigh, and have their use for the motion thereof, notwithstanding their origination may be either from the back, (inwardly, as the chief flexor, the Psoas; or outwardly, as the first extender, Gluteus major;) or from the os ilium, (as most other movers of the thigh have;) ought all to be accounted into the number of the strong men.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 65.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently. Wiseman, Surgery.

EXTENDIBLE. † adj. [from extend.]

1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That may be seized by law.

Warrants for vagrants are not extendible to knight-errants! Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 263.

EXTENDLESSNESS. n. s. [from extend.] Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found; but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain molecular seminates must keep the world from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

EXTENSIBILITY. n. s. [from extensible.] The quality of being extensible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility, who can say? Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

EXTENSIBLE. † adj. [old Fr. extensible.]

1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The mallens, being fixed to an extensible membrane, follow the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward. Holder.

2. Capable of being extended to a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry. Glanville.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. s. [from extensible.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTENSION. n. s. [from extensio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.
All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown.
This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, movable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of unsolid, inseparable, and immovable parts. Locke.

EXTENSIONAL. adj. [from extension.] Long drawn out; having great extent.

You run into these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wriggings up and down of pismires. More, Divine Dialogues.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [extensivus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them. Watts on the Mind.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.] Widely; largely.

E X T

It is impossible for any to pass a right judgement concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aright. Watts on the Mind.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. s. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit.

Government of the Tongue.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service. Watts, Logick.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray on the Creation.

EXTENSION. n. s. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck. Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended. Not used.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly. Spenser, F. Q.

EXTENT. n. s. [extensus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons. Milton, P. L.

2. Bulk; size; compass.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes. Milton, P. L.
Ariana, of Darius' race,
That rul'd the extent of Asia. Glover.

3. Communication; distribution.

An emperor of Rome
Troubled, confronted thus, and for the extent,
Of equal justice us'd with such contempt. Shakespeare.

4. Execution; seizure.

Let my officers
Make an extent upon his house and land,
And turn him going. Shakespeare, As you like it.

TO EXTENUATE. v. a. [extenuo, Latin.]

1. To lessen; to make small or slender in bulk.

His body behind his head becomes broad, from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail. Grew, Muscum.

2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.

To persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shakespeare.

But fortune there extenuates the crime;
What's vice in me, is only mirth in him. Dryden, Juv.

3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.

Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton, P. L.

4. To lessen in representation; to palliate: opposite to aggravate.

When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shakespeare, Othello.

Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation. Bacon.

Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton, S. A.

5. To make lean.

The people from their infancy are bred up with dry basket, and other extenuating diet, to make them extreme lean. Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 53.

E X T

6. To make rare: opposed to dense.

The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

He the congealed vapours melts again,
Extenuated into drops of rain. Sandys, Job, p. 53.

EXTENUATE.  adj.* [from the verb.] Small; thin.

The body slender, lank, and extenuate. Hudoe in V. Body.
Thinness having extenuate parts. Scott, Ess. on Drapery, (1635,) p. 7.

EXTENUATION. † n. s. [old Fr. extenuation.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.

Other artists have substituted the practice of apology or extenuation. Ld. Shaftesbury.

2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.

When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can allege in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.

3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay in the muscular flesh of the whole body. Quincy.

A third sort of marasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXTERIOR. adj. [exterior, Latin.] Outward; external; not intrinsick.

And what is faith, love, virtue unesay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton, P. L.
Seraphick and common lovers behold exterior beauties as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glasses. Boyle.

Father, blacker, and merrier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.

EXTERIOR.  n. s.* Any outward appearance.

She did so course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

EXTERIORITY.  n., s.* [old Fr. exteriorité.] Outwardness; the superficies; the outside or upper part. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXTERIORLY. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.

You have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child. Shakespeare.

TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.

Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies; but they were exterminated by Sandrocothus. Arbutnot on Coins.

This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world. Bentley, Serm.

EXTERMINATION. n. s. [from exterminate.] Destruction; excision.

The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people? Bacon.

EXTERMINATOR. † n. s. [exterminator, Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXTERMINATORY.  adj.* [from exterminate.] Consigning to destruction.

After what has passed in 1782, one would not think that decorum, to say nothing of policy, would permit them to sell up, by magic charms, the grounds, reasons, and principles of those various confiscatory, and exterminatory periods. Burke, Lett. to E. Burke, Esq.

TO EXTERMINE. † v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To exterminate; to destroy. Not now in use.

EXT

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Enemies that strive to destroy, loose, abolish, burn, and extermine from the world the books of it. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 210.

EXTERN. † adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. External; outward; visible.

When my outward action doth demonstrate

The native act and figure of my heart

In compliment extern, 'tis not long after

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve

For daws to peck at. Shakespeare, Othello.

We contend about the extern policy and government of the church. Bacon on the Contriv. of the Ch. of England.

Those things of extern mode and fashion, which will either cease to be doubted of and used, when once they appear, to a gracious heart, any way evil. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 83.

Nor are the observations of the eye any thing profitable, unless the mind draw something from the extern object to enrich the soul withal. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 196.

2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic; not depending on itself.

When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.

EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without: opposite to internal.

We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.

Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces. Woodward.

2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.

Adam was then no less glorious in his externals: he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul. South.

He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stillington.

EXTERNALITY. * n. s. [from external.] *External perception.

Pressure or resistance necessarily supposes externality in the thing which presses or resists. A. Smith on the external Senses.

EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.] Outwardly.

The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good. Bp. Taylor.

TO EXTYL. v. n. [ex and stillo, Latin.] To drop or distil from.

EXTILLATION. n. s. [from ex and stillo, Latin.] The act of falling in drops.

They seemed made by an exudation or extillation of putrifying juices out of the rocky earth. Derham, Phys. Theology.

TO EXTYMULATE. v. a. [extimulo, Latin.] To prick; to incite by stimulation.

Choler is one extirpation whereby nature excludeth another, which, depending unto the bowels, extimulates and excites them unto expulsion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXTIMULATION. n. s. [from extimulatio, Latin.]

Pungency, power of exciting motion or sensation.

The native spirits admit great diversity; as hot, cold, active, dull, &c. whence proceed most of the virtues of bodies; but the air intermixed is without virtues, and maketh things impud, and without any extimulation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EXTINCT. adj. [extinctus, Latin.]

1. Extinguished; quenched; put out.

They are extinct, quenched as tow.

Isaiah, xliii. 17.

EXT

Their purple vengeance burnt in your redress.
Her weapons blunted, and scatter her darts. Pope.

2. At a stop; without progressive succession.

My days are extinct. Job, xlvii. 1.

The royal family is an extinct family.
And he who reigns bestows his crown on me. Dryden.

The nobility are never likely to be extinct, because the greatest part of their titles descend to their generals. Swift.

3. Abolished; out of force.

A censure inflicted extinct continues, though such law be extinct, or the lawgiver removed from his office. Locke.

TO EXTYNCT. * v. n. [Lat. extingui.] To make extinct; to put out.

It may seem to his high wisdom meet — to extinct and make frustrate the payments of the said annates or first-fruits. Act of Parl. 23 Hen. 8. Act 33.

• Give renew'd fire to our extinct spirits. Shakespeare, Othello.

EXTINCTION. n. s. [extinctio, Latin.]

1. The act of quenching or extinguishing.

Red-hot needles or wires, extinguished in quicksilver, do yet acquire a verticity according to the laws of position and extinction. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The state of being quenched.

The parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat and dissipation of their radical moisture. Harvey.

3. Destruction; excision.

The extinction of nations, and the desolation of kingdoms, were but the effects of this destructive evil. Rogers, Sermon.

4. Suppression.

They lie in dead oblivion, losing half
The fleeting moments of too short a life,
Total extinction of th' enlighten'd soul. Thomson, Summer.

TO EXTYNGUISH. v. a. [extinguo, Latin.]

1. To put out; to quench.

The soft god of pleasure that warm'd our desires,
Has broken his bow, and extinguish'd his fires. Dryden.
Then rose the seed of chaos and of night,
To blot out order, and extinguish light. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To suppress; to destroy.

They extinguish the love of the people to the young king,
by remembering some imperfections of his father. Hayward.
My fame of chastity, by which the skies
I reacht before, by thee extinguish'd dies. Denham.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Her nat'ral graces that extinguish art. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

EXTYNGUISHABLE. † adj. [from extinguish.] That may be quenched, suppressed, or destroyed. Sherwood.

EXTYNGUISHER. † n. s. [from extinguish.]

1. A hollow cone put upon a candle to quench it.

If it should ever offer to flame out again, I would use the comical as an extinguisher to smother it. More, Div. Dialog.
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames. Dryden, Ann. of the Ab. 1703.

'Tis better to cover the vital flame with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket. Collier, on the Value of Life.

2. Simply, that which quenches or puts out.

To say truth, though some call their profound ignorances, new lights, they were better baptised into the appellation of extinguishers; carried about with every wind. Whitlock, Memoirs of the Duke of Devon.

Learning they hold rather a disparagement than ornament; an extinguisher than a kindler of their new light, and strange fire. Fontenay, Disputa. Deut. 2. 202.

EXTYNGUISHMENT. † n. s. [from extinguish.]

1. Extinguishment; suppression; act of quenching; destruction.

EXT

When death's form appears, she feareth not

An utter overthrow, or utter overthrow.
She would be glad to meet with such a lot.
That might, might, all future ill prevent.
He moved him to a war upon Flanders, for the better satisfaction
Of the civil wars of France.
The immediate cause of death is the resolution or extinguishment
Of the spirit.
Davies.
Bacon.
Bacon, Ess. of Hist.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Divine laws of Christian church polity may not be altered by extinguishment.
Hooker.

It is the most humble petition of his nobles and commons, that for extinguishment of all ambiguities and doubts it may be enacted in form and manner as followeth, &c.
Ed. Herbert, Hen. 8. p. 397.

3. Termination of a family or succession.

His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour.
Davies on Ireland.

To EXTIRP.† v. a. [extirper, old Fr. extirpo, Lat.]

To eradicate; to root out. Not now used; though formerly very common.

Which to extirpe he laid him privily
Down in a darksome lowly place far in.
Nor shall that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces.
For these not knowing how to owe a gift
Of that dear grace, but with their shame; being plac'd
So 'bove all powers of their gratitude,
Began to hate the benefit; and, in place
Of thanks, devise t' extirp the memory
Of such an act.
Spenser, F. Q.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
B. Jonson, For.

To extirp all knowledge, and exile
All brave and ancient things for ever from this isle.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

A time to plant, to extirp; to kill, to cure;
A time to batter down, a time to immure.
Sandys, Reclisast. p. 4.

EXTIRPABLE.* adj. [Lat. extirpo.] That may be eradicated.

Least it infect the ground with a plant not easily extirpable.
Evelyn's Earth.

To EXTIRPATE.† v. a. [extirpo, Lat.] To root out; to eradicate; to excise; to destroy.

The rebels were grown so strong, that they made account speedily to extirpate the British nation in that kingdom.
Dryden.

We in vain endeavour to drive the wolf from our own to another's door: the breed ought to be extirpated out of the island.
Locke.

It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the affections,
but to regulate them.
Addison, Spect.

EXTIRPATION.† n. s. [old Fr. extirpation.] The act of rooting out; eradication; excision; destruction.

It is said that popery, for want of utter extirpation, hath in some places taken root and flourished again.
Hooker.

It is rather an extirpation than a plantation.
Bacon, Ess. of Plantations.

Religion requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unsocial and troublesome to one another.
Tillotson.

EXTIRPATOR. n. s. [from extirpate.] One who roots out; a destroyer.

EXTIRPATOR. adj. [extirpator, Lat.] Augural; relating to the inspection of entrails in order to prognostication.

That hath he devised many devices unto his augural, and extirpator traditions; from counsel and conjectured contingences;
divining events exceeding.
Brown, Fug. Eccl.

To EXTOL. v. a. [extoll, Lat.] To praise; to magnify; to laud; to celebrate.

Extol him that rideth upon the heavens.
Psalm, xcviii.

EXT

When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue and look, what he saith: they extol it to the clouds.
Ecclesi. xiii. 23.

Heaven and earth shall high extol
The praise, with the innumerable sound
Of hymns, and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
Encompass'd shall resound thee ever bless'd.
Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet sinomum boast.
Milton, P. L.
Dryden, Ovid.

EXTOLLER.† n. s. [from extol.] A praiser; a magnifier;
one that praises to the skies.

Extollers of the pope's supremacy.
Bacon, Charge at the Sea, of the Verge.

EXTORSIVE. adj. [from extort.] Having the quality of drawing by violent means.

EXTORSIVELY. adv. [from extorsive.] In an extorsive manner; by violence.

To EXTORT. v. a. [extorquo, extortus, Lat.]

1. To draw by force; to force away; to wrest; to wring from one.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free.
That glory never shall his worth or might Extort from me, to bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his pow'r.
I remember well the impious oath,
Hardly extorted from my trembling youth.
My earnest desires, not any doubts of your goodness, but my real concern for your welfare, extort this from me.
Shakespeare, Cymb.
Milton, P. L.
Rome.
Wate.

2. To gain by violence or oppression.

His tail was stretch'd out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever burning lamps from thence it brought.
Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?
Spenser.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

To EXTORT. v. n. To practise oppression and violence.
Now disused.

To whom they never gave any penny of entertainment, but let them feed upon the countries, and extort upon all men where they come.
Spenser on Ireland.

Before they did extort and oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same extortions by warrant.
Davies on Ireland.

EXTORT.* part. For extorted.

Having great lordships got and goodly farms
Through strong oppression of his power extort.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 5.

EXTORTER. n. s. [from extort.] One who practises oppression or extortion.

Edric the extorter was deprived by king Canute of the government of Mercia.
Camden, Remains.

EXTORTION. n. s. [from extort.]

1. The act or practice of gaining by violence and rapacity.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Oppression and extortion did maintain the greatness, and oppression and extortion did extinguish the greatness of that house.
Davies on Ireland.

2. Force by which any thing is unjustly taken away.

Because the lords had power to impose this charge, the freeholders were glad to give a great part of their lands, to hold the rest free from that extortion.
Davies on Ireland.
A succeeding king's just recovery of rights from unjust usurpations and extortion, shall never be prejudiced by any act of might.
King Charles.

EXTORTIONARY. n. s. [from extortion.] One who practises extortion; one who practises violence and rapacity.

There will be always murderers, adulterers, extortioners, church-robbers, traitors, and other rabblement. Camden.
The covetous extortioner is involved in the same sentence.

Decay of Piety.

EXTORTIOUS.* adj. [from extort.] Oppressive; violent; unjust.

Upon the sight we do well and wisely, by all politic provisions, to meet with or prevent all those peccant humours which may occasion a publick distemper; to curb the lawless insolence of some, the seditious machinations of others, the extortion cruelties of some, the corrupt wresting of justice in others. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

EXTRA.* [Latin.] A word often used in composition, meaning over and above, extraordinary, or the like; as, extra-work, extra-pay, &c. Or beyond; as, extrajudicial, extramundane, &c.

To EXTRA'CT. v. a. [extraho, extractum, Lat.]

1. To draw out of something.

The drawing one metal or mineral out of another, we call extracting. Bacon, Phys. Remains.

Out of the ashes of all plants they extract a salt which they use in medicines. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The metallick or mineral matter is so diffused amongst the crasser matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward.

2. To draw by chymical operation.

They

Whom sunny Borneo bears, are stor'd with streams
Egregious, rum and rice's spirit extract. Philips.

3. To take from something of which the thing taken was a part.

I now see

Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, myself
Before me: woman is her name, of man
Extracted. Milton, P. L.

4. To draw out of any containing body or cavity.

These waters were extracted, and laid upon the surface of the ground. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

5. To select and abstract from a larger treatise.

To see how this case is represented, I have extracted out of that pamphlet a few notorious falsehoods. Swift.

EXTRACT.† n. s. [from the verb. Addison has placed the accent on the last syllable of this substantive, in his translation of Virgil's fourth Georgick; but it is now constantly on the first.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chymists call the extract of the vegetables. Beale.

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality. Government of the Tongue.

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors. Camden, Rem.

Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Essays.

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak. Swift.

3. Extraction; descent. Not used.

The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness. South.

EXTRA'CTION. n. s. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chymical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility. Bacon.

The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments are unknown to the ancients.

Hakewill on Providence.

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irretrievably lost. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whose extraction's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meekest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood.

Waller.

A family of an ancient extraction, transported with the conquerour out of Normandy. Clarendon.

EXTRA'CTIVE.* adj. [from extract.] Capable of being extracted.

Mr. Giobert has communicated, to the publick, the analysis of a fertile soil in the vicinity of Turin, where it rains yearly above 40 inches on the square foot. He found 1lb. of it to contain from 20 to 30 grains of extractive matter which flamed and burned, and therefore was a coal soluble in water.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 55.

EXTRA'CTOR. n. s. [Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extracted.

EXTRADI'CTIONARY. adj. [extra and dictio, Latin.] Not consisting in words but realities.

Of extradictionary and real fallacies, Aristotle and logicians make six; but we observe men are commonly deceived by four thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXTRAJUDI'CIAL. adj. [extra and judicium, Latin.]

Out of the regular course of legal procedure.

A declaratory or extrajudicial absolution is conferred in foro penitentiali. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXTRAJUDI'CIALLY. adv. [from extrajudicial.] In a manner different from the ordinary course of legal procedure.

The confirmation of an election, though done by a previous citation of all persons concerned, may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon. Ayliffe.

EXTRAMISSION. n. s. [extra and mitto, Latin.]

The act of emitting outwards: opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that sight is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object unto the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMUNDANE. adj. [extra and mundus, Latin.]

Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philosophy that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanville, Sceptra.

EXTRA'NEOUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsic.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specific gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Fossils.

EXTRAORDINARIES.* See EXTRAORDINARY, n. s.

EXTRAORDINARI'LY. adv. [from extraordinary.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the Scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they sought it at his hands. Hooker.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally; for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Howell.

E X T

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as serviceable. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EXTRAORDINARINESS. n. s. [from extraordinary.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I thuse some few either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice. Gay, of the Tongue.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Lat.]

This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaine and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Darwin.

2. Differing from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillingfleet.

EXTRAORDINARY.* n. s. Any thing which exceeds ordinary method or computation. Uncommon in the singular number.

All the extraordinaries in the world, which fall out by no steady rules and causes, I style prodigies preternatural.

Spencer on Prod. p. 163.

EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary rare. Addison.

EXTRAPAROCHIAL. † adj. [extra and parochia, Lat.]

Not comprehended within any parish; privileged or exempt from the duties of a parish. Cowell.

EXTRAPROVINCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

An extraprovincial citation is not valid, ultra duas dietas, above two days journey; nor is a citation valid that contains many conditions manifestly inconvenient. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXTRAREGULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

EXTRAVAGANCE. † n. s. [extravagance, old French; extravagans, Latin.]

1. Excursion or rally beyond prescribed limits.

I have troubled you too far with this extravagance; I shall make no delay to recall myself into the road again. Hammond.

2. Irregularity; wildness.

Using such ways of sweetness, neatness, and decency (which are potent decoys to love) as may best keep their husbands from any loathing or indifference, also from any extravagancy.

Bp. Taylor, Arif. Handson. p. 39.

3. Outrage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson.

E X T

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.

Some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor, cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.

She was so expensive, that the income of three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbutnot.

EXTRAVAGANT. † adj. [extravagant, old Fr.; extravagans, Latin.]

1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogenial sense, but not now in use.

At his warning,

The extravagant and erring spirit hies To his confine. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.

I dare not ask for what you would not grant:

But wishes, madam, are extravagant;

They are not bounded with things possible;

I may wish more than I presume to tell. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

3. Not comprehended in any thing. Dr. Johnson has here given, as an example, the substantive which has a law-sense. See EXTRAVAGANTS.

4. Irregular; wild.

They were all seen, but in an extravagant order.

B. Jonson, Masquet.

For a dance they seem'd

Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton, P. L.

There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream. Addison, Spect.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison.

EXTRAVAGANT. † n. s.

1. A stroller; a vagabond.

They took me up for a stravagant.

Nobody and Somebody, (1598.)

EXT

TO EXTRA'VAGATE.† v. n. [extravagari, "to roam, extravagate, range, &c." Catgrave. extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits.

When the body plunges into the luxury of sense, the mind will extravagate through all the regions of a vitiated imagination. Warburton, Serm. xx.

EXTRAVAGA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. extravagation.] Excess.

I do not pretend to justify the extravagations of the mob. Smollet.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.]

Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXTRAVASA'TION. n. s. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VASE. adj. [extra and vena, Latin.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is effected in like manner as is the extravase blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville, Scepais.

EXTRA'VERSION. n. s. [extra and versio, Latin.]

The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [an obsolete participle from extract; as distract from distract.] Extracted.

Shew'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught, To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

EXTRA'IT.* n. s. [old Fr. extraiet, or extrait.] Extraction. Spenser has also used extract in the same sense. But both are obsolete.

Some scribes doe doubt in their deviceful ay,
Whether this heavenly thing whereof I treat,
To waken Mercie, be of Justice part,
Or drage forth from her by divine extract. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. i.

EXTREME.† adj. [extreme, old French; extremus, Latin.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification. The word was also formerly accented on the first syllable, but is now constantly on the last.

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deut. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool

Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Accompanying it with tears. Shakespeare, As you like it.

His own's tape and Baul's last be view'd,
That on the extremest borders stood. Addison on Italy.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those and shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drown my love. Dryden.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometimes but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

EXT

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is said, O Lord, what shall abide it? Psalm in Comm. Anger.

EXTREME.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by happy-footed series halt.

At certain revolutions, all the extremes
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change, more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice.

Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immovable, infix'd, and frozen round

Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton, P. L.
Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of each,
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be praised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope, Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agree with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

3. Extravagance of conduct. Obsolete.

My gracious lord,

To chide at your extremes, it not becomes me;

O, pardon that I name them: your high self,

The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd

With a swain's wearing. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

EXTRE'MELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTRE'MITY.† n. s. [extremité, old Fr. extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority. Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing-feathers, which are black. Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuthnot on Diag.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition,

Made up of all the worst extremities

Of youth and age. Denham, Epoly.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Ethiopia, and imported quantities of extremities goods. Hooker.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate

The strong extremities of their damage. Spenser, F. Q.

If I shew no colour for my extremity, he will be your table-sport. Shakespeare.

6. The utmost violence; rigour; or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by the same laws, as the Jews were?
Spenser on Ireland.

And make her to extremity of time.
Spenser, F. Q.

This world is a period
To such as love not something but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity.
Clarendon.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands.
Clarendon.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer Before the last extremities of war.
Dryden, Fed. Emperour.

The most aggravated state.
The world is running mad after force, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgement that is fallen upon dramatic writing.
Dryden, Pref. to Cleop.

EXTRICABLE.† adj. [Lat. extricabilis.] Which may be rid or avoided.
Cockeram.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.] To dis-embarrass; to get free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.
Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels.
Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. s. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such preexist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication.
Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL.† adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] Ex-ternal; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal, Dr. Johnson observes; and good writers, it may be added, have so given it.

Thus bishop Bramhall, more than a century and a half since. And thus Burke, in modern times.

The old French also is extrinsequer

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.
Digby on Bodies.

A concourse of necessary extrinsic causes.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course.
Ray on the Creation.

Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge.
Locke.

More observe the characters of men than the order of things; to the one we are formed by nature and by that sympathy, from which we are so strongly led to take a part in the passions and manners of our fellow men. The other is as it were foreign and extrinsic.
Burke, Ess. on the Drama.

EXTRINSICALLY.† adv. [from extrinsic.] From without.

It is not extrinsically predetermined, he should not say, I will not, but I shall say.
Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 29.

It is not the soul, a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsic to it, that is in direct contact with all the world.
Clavelle.

EXTRINSICK.† adj. [extrinsecus, old Fr. extrinsecus, Latin.] Outward; extrinsic; not intrinsic.

When they cannot think of the soul, they say, if they can, they will not, of the extrinsic adherents.
Gov. of the Tongue.

The symbol and the words of, make no part of the letters.

nor began the first paragraph of them. — "Two extrinsec, if I mistake not, to the letter."
Bentley, Phil. Lips. §. 46.

EXTRINSEC. Modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated.

Watts, Logick.

To EXTRACT. v. a. [extraho, extractum, Latin.]

To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRUCTION.† n. s. [Lat. extractio.] A building.

Cockeram.

EXTRUCTION.† adj. [from extruere.] Forming into a structure.

If it were not as easy for us to say, that papistry is both affirmative and extractive of all wickedness.

Fulke, Answer to Frarise's Doct. (1580), p. 41.

EXTRUCTOR. n. s. [from extruere.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

To EXTRUDE. v. a. [extrudo, Latin.] To thrust off; to drive off, to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

EXTRUSION. n. s. [extrusus, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea formed, and mountains and caverns, by a violent depression of some parts of the earth, and an extrusion and elevation of others.

Durand.

EXTUBERANCE.† n. s. [Lat. extuberans.] See EXTUBERANT.] A knob, or part protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The gouge takes off the irregularities or extuberances that lie farthest from the axis of the work.

Mason, Mach. Ex.

Consider the humerus, its head, its neck, its pulley, its apophyses, its extuberances.

Smith, Porcature of Old Age, p. 60.

EXTUBERANCY.† n. s. Any protuberance.

"And the dry land appeared!" Nothing precisely glorious as before, but recompensed with an extuberancy of hills and mountains for the receipts, into which God had sunk the waters.

Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 114.

EXTUBERANT.† adj. [Lat. extuberans.] Swelling.

Bullockar.

His smiles have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

Such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time. Addison, Freeholder.

EXUBERANTLY. adv. [from exuberant.] Abundantly;
to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TO EXUBERATE. † v. n. [exubero, Latin.] To bear in great abundance; to abound in the highest degree.
A word in use long before Boyle wrote, being found with the first of the preceding definitions in Cockeram's vocabulary.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EXUCCOUS. adj. [exsuccus, Latin.] Without juice;
dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exsuccous and dry unto us. Brown.

EXUDATION. n. s. [from exudo, Latin.]

1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock rubies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.

Cuckowspittle, or woodseer, that spumous frothy dew or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary. Brown, Vulg. Err.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass.

Newton.

EYEGLUTTING. adj. [eye and glut.] Feasting the eye to satiety.

Mammon, said he, thy godhead's vaunt is vain,
And idle offers of thy golden fee;
To them that covet such eyeglutting gain
Proffer thy gifts!

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 9.

EYELASH. n. s. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EYELESS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Promise was, that I
Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him
Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves.

Milton, S. A.

Pentheus durst deride
The cheated people, and the eyeless guide.

Addison.

Poor eyeless pilgrim.

Philips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,
Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyeless face.

Pope, Odyssey.

EYELET. n. s. [eyellet, French, a little eye.] A hole through which light may enter; any small perforation for a lace to go through.

Slitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close.

Wiseman, Surg.

EYELIAD. n. s. [Fr. oëillade.] An eyegance; an eyebeam.

Who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious eyeliads.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

She gave strange eyeliads, and most speaking looks,
To noble Edmund.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

EYELID. n. s. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when she smiles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!

When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit.

Spenser, Sonnets.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death.

Job, xvi. 16.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly doat

Upon the next live creature that it sees.

Shakespeare.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the sight;

And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night.

Dryden.

EYEOFFENDING. adj. [eye and offend.] That hurts or offends the eye.

Like a cloistress, she will velvet walk,
And water once a day her chamber round

With eye-offending brims.

Shakespeare, Tim. Night.

Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks.

Shakespeare, K. John.

EYE

EYOT. n. s. A little island. See EX and EIGHT.
It seems just, that the eyots or little islands, arising in any part of the river, shall be the property of him who owneth the pistry and the soil.

Blackstone.

EYEPEASING. adj. [eye and please.] Gratifying the sight.

Corneliness, the child of order sweet,
Enamels it with her eye-pleasing rays.

Sir J. Davies, Orchestra, st. 113.

Milton, of Ref. in England.

EYESERVANT. n. s. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESERVICE. n. s. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants, obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice, as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart.

Col. iii. 22.

EYESHOT. n. s. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows.

Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyes by this means.

Speccator.

EYESIGHT. n. s. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompenced me according to my cleanness in his eyesight.

a Sam. xxii. 25.

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;

Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Shakespeare.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestic ease,

Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad.

Milton, S. A.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

He blinds the wise, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind.

Dryden.

EYESORE. n. s. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become new, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it?

Hobbes.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival.

Shakespeare, Tim. of the Shrew.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore.

Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman.

L'Estrange.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

EYESPOTTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain.

Spenser.

EYESTRING. n. s. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings, crackt them, to look upon him.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, for their gums be red, and the eyestrings runny.

Shakespeare, Tim. Night.

E Y E

EYETOOTH. n. s. [eye and tooth.] The tooth on the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EYEWINK. n. s. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shakspeare.

EYEWITNESS. n. s. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty.

2 Peter, i. 16.

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood

Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
With jubilee advanc'd.

Milton, P. L.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve.

Addison on the Christ. Religion.

E Y R

EYRE.† n. s. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowel.

Some of the judges of the bench, or of the grand eyre.

Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 187.

EYRY.† n. s. [from ey, Teut. an egg; cyry, i. e. eggery. See AERIE.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

Hawks of different kinds, and not of the same eyrie or nest.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 119.

The eagle, and the stork,

On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build.

Milton, P. L.

Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,

Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.

Dryden.

Our farmer was himself the man, that last year plundered the eagle's cyrie.

Gray to Dr. Wharton.

F A B

F, † A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, (except in the preposition of, where it is pronounced like v;) formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Icelandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

This letter is derived to us from the Romans, who adopted it from the Æolians; among whom it is called digamma. See DIGAMMA.

FA.* [In musick.] One of the notes or syllables, invented by Guido Aretine, to mark the fourth sound of the modern scale of musick; do or ut, re, mi, fa.

O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! fa, sol, la, mi! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FABA'CEOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA'BLE. n. s. [fable, Fr. fabula, Lat.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison, Spect.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all these fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables. 1 Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison, Spect.

F A B

5. A lie; a vicious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE. † v. n. [old Fr. fabler; Lat. fabello.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
To say verity, and not to fable;

We are a merry rout, or else a rabble,
Or company, or, by a figure, chorus,
That for thy dignity will dance a morris.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

She fables not; I feel that I do fear

Her words set off by some superiour power. Milton, Comus.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,

Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell

Thou fablest. Milton, P. L.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton, P. L.

FA'BLEM. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!

Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. † n. s. [from fable; old Fr. fablor.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories; "a teller of fables." Huloet.

The courtier ought to give credit neither to funeral sermons, nor to Gallobelgicus, or other such idle fablers.

Stafford's Niobe, (1611.) p. 20.

The bold legends of lying fablers. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 130.

To FA'BRICATE. † v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct; to frame. Cookeram.

New fancied and new fabricated republicks.

Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICATION. n. s. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

F A B

FA'BRICATOR.* n. s. [Lat. fabricator; old Fr. fabricateur.] One who builds, constructs, or frames.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The Almighty fabricator of the universe doth nothing in vain. Howell, Lett. iii. 9.

The translator or fabricator of the works of Ovidian. Mason on Church Musick, p. 191.

FA'BRICK.† n. s. [fabric or fabrique, old Fr. fabrica, Lat.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK.† v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

The discipline of Geneva, framed and fabricked already to our hands. Milton, Arcopagitica.

Shew what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

FA'BRILE.* adj. [old Fr. fabrile; Lat. fabrilis.] Of stone or timber; belonging to the craft of a smith, mason, or carpenter. Cotgrave.

FA'BULIST.† n. s. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.

They come in lamely, with their mouldy tales out of Boccacio, like stale Tabarine, the fabulist. B. Jonson, Fox.

For the most part, when better evidence fails us, we lay the crime to the charge of Fortune, who very fitly by the fabulist is represented with a great complaint in her mouth upon that occasion.

Dudley, Ld. North, Light to Paradise, (1682,) p. 93.
Quitting Æsop and the fabulists, he copies Boccaccio.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Croxal, Garrick.

FABULO'SITY.† n. s. [fabulosité, old Fr. fabulositas, Lat.] Fulness of feigned stories; fabulous invention. Huot.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Lat.] Feigned; full of fables, invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison, Spect.

FA'BULOUSLY.† adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

These gods [Hymen, Comus, Hebe, &c.] so fabulously and foolishly made—they did celebrate in hymns.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 667.

Figuring the place from whence, as I have been, not fabulously, informed, the honourable family of the Radcliffe first took their name. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Giants—fabulously supposed begotten by spirits upon Diodorian's or Danaus' daughters.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. 8. 8.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FA'BULOUSNESS.* n. s. [from fabulous.] Invention of fables. Sherwood.

The fabulousness of the heroical age of Greece. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 6.

His [Boethius's] history is written with elegance and vigour, but his fabulousness and credulity are justly blamed.

Johnson, Journey West. Islands.

F A C

FA'BURDEN.* n. s. [Fr. fauvbourdon.] In musick, simple counterpoint.

FACE. n. s. [face, Fr. from facies, Lat.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison, Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kickt out, we set the best face on't we could. Dryden, Virg.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton, P. L.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. B. Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Presence; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden, Iliad.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them; a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. L'Estrange.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. Acts, xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies. Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

To FACE. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite. Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,

To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Fair Margaret knows,
That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign.

2. To turn the face; to come in front. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice again,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

To FACE. † v. n.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.

Here's a villain that would face me down
He met me on the mart. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

We trosp'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. With out also, which Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice.

Now, face out your matter with a card of ten.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) p. 59.

A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

4. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Pope.

5. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble. Addison.

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Much facetiousness passes betwixt the Frere and the Sompnour. Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 455.

FA'CILE. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant. Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glanville.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn, Kalendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. B. Jonson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile thus reply'd. Milton, P. L.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainsay;
Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton, P. L.

Since Adam and his facile consort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton, P. L.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

F A C

FA'CILELY.* adv. [from facile.] Easily. Huloet.
Seeing the one might be as facilly impetrate as the other.

Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 227.

FA'CILENESS.* n. s. [from facile.] Easiness to be persuaded to good or bad.

Alas,

That facile hearts should to themselves be foes,
When others they with facileness befriend!

Beaumont's Psyche, xv. 175.

To FAC'ILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITATION.* n. s. [from facilitate.] The act of making easy, of freeing from impediments.

A facilitation towards fidelity,

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 118.

Who can believe that they, who first watched the course of the stars, foresaw the use of their discoveries to the facilitation of commerce, or the mensuration of time?

Johnson, Rambler, No. 103.

FAC'ILITY. n. s. [facilité, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason saith, reason should have ability

To hold these worldly things in such proportion,

As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon, Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good nature; tenderness without discretion is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.

FACINEROUS.† See FACINOROUS.

FA'CI'NG.† n. s. [from To face.]

1. An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

A garment which had a border at the bottom, and a facings at the hands of another colour, different from the garment. Bp. Patrick on Gen. xxxvii. 3.

2. Simply, a covering.

F A C

Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and belting the hills far and wide with white, more especially if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facing, they must have been visible at a vast distance. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 67.

FACINOROUS.† adj. [Lat. facinus, facinoris. In Shakspeare the corrupt spelling of facinorious is found in an old copy of the play, which Dr. Johnson considers as the poet's own mistake in regard to the word. No example of facinorous is given by Dr. Johnson; but the word about Shakspeare's time was not uncommon.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most facinorous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the very hand of heaven. Shakspeare, All's well.

The more facinorous malefactors.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. K. Rich. III. p. 28.

Things highly charged with sin, even to a more facinorous and notorious degree. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 131.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACSIMILE.* n. s. [Latin; an abbreviation of factum simile, i. e. made like.] An exact copy.

You should publish these [exemplars of various modes of writing] in drawings, copied per factum simile.

Pownall on Antiq. Lett. to Askle, p. 178.

A fac simile of the first page of an ancient manuscript of St. John's Gospel. Archæologia, xvi. 21.

FACT.† n. s. [faict, French; factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat sour or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South, Sermon.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison on the War.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws

Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:

Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,

'Tis love of honour and his country's good;

The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FA'CTION.† n. s. [faction, French; factio, Lat.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;

If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd

Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He has been known to commit outrages,

And cherish factions. Shakspeare, Timon.

By one of Simon's faction murders were committed.

2 Mac. iv. 3.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factions. King Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.

There is among you envying, and strife, and dissensions, [in the margin, factions.]

1 Cor. iii. 3.

They remained at Newbury in great faction among themselves.

Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. s. [factionnaire, Fr.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general. Shakespeare, Coriol.

FACTIONER.* n. s. [from faction.] One of a faction. All the factioners had entered into such a seditious conspiracy. Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, iv. 12.

FACTIONIST.* n. s. [from faction.] One who promotes faction, or discord.

We live with Puritans, and opposite factionists, that have the cross of Christ in as great contempt and despite, as ever had Julian or any Pagan. Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 271.

Some busy factionists of the meaner sort. Bp. Hall, Rom. p. 419.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factieux, Fr.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publicly dissentious; addicted to form parties and raise publick disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower, And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

2. Proceeding from publick dissensions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon In factious opposition. Milton, P. I.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissentious or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented. King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissension; violent clamorousness for a party. Sherwood.

The factiousness, disobedience, and disorders of the nonconformists. Puller, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 499.

FACITIOUS. adj. [factitius, Lat.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTIVE.* adj. [Lat. factus.] Having the power to make.

You are, creator-like, factive, not destructive. Bacon, Lett. to James I.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land; Not as protector, steward, substitute, Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Piercy is but my factor, good my lord, T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

You all three, The senators alone of this great world, Chief factors for the gods. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate. Raleigh, Apology.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factory doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intronisation of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away. South.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne, He made all countries where he came his own; And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway, A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORAGE.* n. s. [from factor.] In commerce, wages or commission for agency in purchasing goods.

FACTORSHIP.* n. s. [from factor.] A factory. Sherwood.

FACTORY.† n. s. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place. They humbly conceive, that the settlement of chaplains in our British factories, at Smyrna and Aleppo, is allowed by the Turks as a right due by the law of nations. Merchants at Leghorn, Pet. to Q. Anne, 1710.

3. A place where any thing is made. Our corrupted hearts are the factories of the devil, which may be at work without his presence. Brown, Chr. Mur. i. 20.

FACTOTUM.† n. s. [fac totum, Lat.] It is used likewise in burlesque French. A servant employed alike in all kinds of business; as Scrub in the Stratagem.

Tip. Art thou the dominus? Host. Factotum here, sir. B. Jonson, New Inn.

FACTURE.† n. s. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing; workmanship. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

There is no doubt but that the facture, and framing, of the inward parts, is as full of difference as the outward. Bacon on Learning, B. 2.

FA'ULTY. n. s. [faculté, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides, Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. Locke.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton, P. I.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. Mechanical power. The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Willins.

4. [In physick.] A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.

Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

Our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6. Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know

My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

7. Natural virtue; efficacy.

He would — in requital ope his leathern scrip,

And shew me simples of a thousand names,

Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton, Comus.

8. Power; authority.

This Duncan

Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been

So clear in his great office, that his virtues

Will plead like angels. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

9. Privilege; right to do any thing.

Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker.

10. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

FACUND.† adj. [facundus, Latin; facond, old French.] Eloquent. Dict.

To FA'DDLE. v. n. [corrupted from To fiddle, or toy with the fingers.], To trifle; to toy; to play. A low word.

To FADE.† v. n. [fade, French, insipid, languid, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather the Latin vado; and the primary sense of fade, formerly written also vade, is to disappear instantaneously; of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.]

1. To disappear instantaneously. See also To VADE. He stands amazed how he thence should fade.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 15.

It faded on the crowing of the cock. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

His imperfect good desires, his fading resolutions.

South, Sermon. viii. 51.

3. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald.

Boyle on Colours.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually. Woodward on Possils.

4. To wither, as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Is. i. 30.

5. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

F A G

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Addison, Cato.

6. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.

The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower. Is. xxviii. 4.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Narcissus' change to the vain virgin shows

Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose.

Gay, Fable.

To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered;

And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Shakespeare.

His palms, though under weights they did not stand,

Still thriv'd; no winter could his laurels fade.

Dryden.

Restless anxiety, forlorn despair,

And all the faded family of care.

Garth, Dispensary.

To FADGE.† v. n. [zezezan, Saxon; fugen, German.]

1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;

And she, mistaken, seems to doat on me.

Shakespeare.

Clothes I must get, this fashion will not fadge with me.

Beaumont and F. Wit without Money.

2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.

They shall be made, spite of antipathy, to fadge together.

Milton, Doct. and Disciph. of Divorce.

When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,

But only by the ears engag'd;

That dogs that snarl about a bone,

And play together when they've none.

Hudibras.

3. To succeed; to hit.

All this will not fadge! Milton, Reason of Church Gov. B. 1.

The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. I. Extrange.

4. This is a mean word not now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.

FA'DING.* n. s. [from fade.] Decay; weakness; loss of strength. Sherwood.

FA'DINGNESS.* n. s. [from fading.] Decay; proneness to fade.

The fadingness of beauty is the greatest detector and impeacher of our frailty.

W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. II. (1654,) p. 231.

Since it [joy] was merely earthly, it must needs partake of the fadingness of its original. Decay of Chr. Piety, (1667,) p. 203.

FA'DY.* adj. [from fade.] Wearing away; decaying.

Survey those walls in fady texture clad.

Shenstone, Economy, P. III.

FANCES. n. s. [Latin.] Excrements; settlements after distillation and infusion. Quincy.

To FA'FFLE.* v. n. [of uncertain etymology; unless a corruption of famble, which is probable. See To FAMBLE.] To stammer. Barret's Alvearie, 1580, where under the present word, reference is made to stammer; and there maffle occurs in the definition. Thus in the north of England faffle and maffle are both used to denote hesitating in speech.

To FAG. v. n. [fatigo, Latin.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.

Creighton with-held his force till the Italian begun to fag, and then brought him to the ground. Mackenzie's Lives.

To FAG.* v. a. To beat. A vulgar expression.

F A I

FAG.* n. s. [from the verb.] A slave; one who works hard. It is a colloquial expression; nor is fag, either as a verb or substantive in this sense, seriously used by good writers.

From the above teasing and tormenting the junior scholars, has originated the present custom of having fags at Eton school, i. e. little boys who are the slaves of the greater ones.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FAG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Sax. feagan, to join together.] A knot or excrescency in cloth, used in the stat. 4. Edw. IV. c. 1. It is also used for the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth. See FAG-END.

FAG-END.† n. s. [from fag and end.]

1. The end of a web of cloth, generally made of coarser materials.
2. In naval language, the end of any rope untwisted by frequent usage, which is secured from being further loosened by winding a piece of small line round it.

3. The refuse or meaner part of any thing.

The kitchen, and gutters, and other offices of noise and drudgery are at the fag-end. Howell, Lett. (1619), i. ii. 8.

At the world's fag-end—

A land—doth lie. Fanshawe, Poems, p. 318.

It seems, Mr. Hobbes, by the fag-end of your book Of Body in English, that you have a mind to say your lesson.

Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, p. 1.

When they are the worst of their way, and fixt in the fag-end of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Collier on Envy.

FAGOT.† n. s. [fagot, Welsh and Armorick; fagot, French. Caseneuve pretends that the word comes from the Lat. fagus, a beech-tree, the first fagots being, as he says, made of the wood of this tree. Others think it connected with the Lat. fasciculus, a bundle; fascicularia, bundles of wood.]

1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.

About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame.

Fairfax.

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;

Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts on the Mind.

2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.

The Black Prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addison.

3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.

There were several other counterfeit books upon the upper shelves, which were carved in wood, and served only to fill up the number like fagots in the muster of a regiment.

Addison, Spect. No. 37.

To FAGOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to bundle together.

He was too warm on picking-work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well.

Dryden, Abs. and Archib.

To FAIL. v. n. [faillir, French; faeln, Welsh; Pezron.]

1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.

The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up.

Job, xiv. 11.

Wherefore should not strength and might

There fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove

Where boldest, though to fight unconquerable? Milton, P. L.

Where the credit and money fail, bawter alone must do.

Loeche.

F A I

2. To be extinct; to cease; to be no longer produced.

More angels to create.

Milton, P. L.

3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.

By fate the strength of gods

And this empyreal substance cannot fail.

Milton, P. L.

For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,

Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,

Least the remembrance of his grief should fail.

Addison.

4. To die; to lose life.

Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,

Their heads should have gone off. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Both he that helpeth shall fail, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Is. xxxi. 3.

5. To sink; to be born down; to come to an end.

Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Is. lvii. 16.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,

Dependant made.

Milton, P. L.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.

Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve

The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek

Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail.

Milton, P. L.

I perceive

Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine

Must needs impair and weary human sense.

Milton, P. L.

7. To miss; not to produce its effect.

Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

All these puissant legions, whose exile

Hath emptied heav'n, shall fail to re-ascend.

Milton, P. L.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,

And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking.

Dryden.

A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.

He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer, Husbandry.

8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail

Of the right casket, never in my life

To woo a maid in way of marriage.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought

All like himself rebellious.

Milton, P. L.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of ailing proceeds from failings in the administration.

J. Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison, Guardian.

9. To be deficient in duty.

Or Nature fail'd in me, and left some part

Not proof enough such object to sustain.

Milton, P. L.

Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon of him. Wake.

To FAIL.† v. a.

1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune faile them. Sidney.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;

But little may such guile thee now avail,

If wonted force and fortune do not much me fail.

Spenser, F. Q.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars,
men's hearts ailing them for fear.

Luke, xxi. 26.

Nor could the muse defend

Her son; so fail not thou who thee implores.

Milton, P. L.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold

And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear.

Milton, P. L.

Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. J. Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision before hand. Locke.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.

3. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fail thee a man on the throne.

1 Kings, ii. 4.

5. To deceive; to cheat. [A Latinism, fallere.] Obsolete.

Deut. xxviii. 65.

2. Deficiency; imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;

The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FA'ILURE. n. s. [from fail.]

1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN.† adj. [Icel. feigin, Su. fagna, Goth. faginon, to be glad, to rejoice; Sax. ægman, the same, and æggn, glad.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. It thus occurs also among the words of our northern counties given by Ray; and was thus formerly in our lexicography: "to be fayne or well pleased," Prompt. Parv. What is rendered fain in one of our translations of the Psalms, is in the other greatly rejoice.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,

Wherein her face she often viewed fain.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Spenser, F. Q. Psalm lxxi. 21.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as, "I was fain to do this," would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every wight to shroud it did constrain,

And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

When Hildebrand had accursed Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand. Raleigh, Essays.

- The learned Castalio was fain to make trenchers at Basle, to keep himself from starving. Locke.

FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.

Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame

I long have stifled, and would fain conceal. Addison, Cato.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse. Addison.

The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level. Swift.

To FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish; to desire fondly.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,

Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser, Hymn on Love.

To FAINT.† v. n. [Dr. Johnson adopts, with Minshew and Skinner, the French faner, to fade, to wither, to die, as the origin of our word. Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces faint to be the past participle of the Sax. fymgean, which means, to grow musty, to spoil, to decay.]

1. To decay; to wear or waste away quickly.

Gilded clouds, while we gaze upon them, faint before the eye, and decay into confusion. Pope.

The show'ry arch

Delights and puzzles the beholder's eyes,

That views the watry brede with thousand shews

Of painture vary'd; yet unskill'd to tell

Or where one colour rises, or where one faints. Philips.

2. To lose the animal functions; to sink motionless and senseless.

Their young children were out of heart, and their women and young men fainted for thirst and fell down. Judith, vii. 22.

We are ready to faint with fasting. 1 Mac. iii. 17.

Upon hearing the honour intended her, she fainted away, and fell down as dead. Guardian.

3. To grow feeble; to decline in force or courage.

They will stand in their order, and never faint in their watches. Eccles. xliii. 10.

The imagination cannot be always alike constrained and strong, and if the success follow not speedily it will faint and lose strength. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

O pity and shame, that they who to live well,

Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread

Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milton, P. L.

How while the fainting Dutch remotely fire,

And the fam'd Eugene's iron troops retire. Smith.

4. To sink into dejection.

Lest they faint

At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,

All terror hide. Milton, P. L.

To FAINT. v. a. To deject; to depress; to enfeeble. A word little in use.

It faints me

To think what follows. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

F A I

FAINT, adj. [fane, French.]

FAINTHEARTED, adj. [faint and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted. Is. vii. 4.

They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there, as fainthearted cowards, to end their days. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Now the late fainthearted rout,
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chac'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out.

Hudibras.

Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless wretches,
Mongrels in faction; poor fainthearted traitors. Addison, Cato.

FAINTISHNESS, n. s. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintishness and debility in a hot day. Arbutnot on Air.

FAINTLING, adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feeble-minded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling silly creature. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

FAINTLY, adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secured from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:

F A I

Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;

The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly;
nothing like the image and horror of it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind. Watts.

The fainty root can take no steady hold. Dryden, Virgil.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;

The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire:

The fainty knights were scorch'd, and knew not where

To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryden.

FAIR, adj. [fægen, Saxon; faur, Danish; fager, Goth. Feg, in our northern dialect, is fair.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptation to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.

He only fair, and what life fair hath made,

All other fair like flowers untimely fade. Spenser.

Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Gen. xii. 11.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,

But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,

She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;

If black, why nature, drawing of an antick,

Made a foul blot. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired: the Moors tawny: the northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

3. Pleasing to the eye; excellent or beautiful in general to the eye or mind.

As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The Caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out.

Raleigh, Essays.

O pity and shame, that they who to live well

Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint.

Milton, P. L.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him.

Clarendon.

9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests, he passed the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death.

Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts: as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious every man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise.

Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel spray;
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite.

Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and being by fair means wrought thereunto, acknowledged king Henry.

Spenser on Ireland.

Is now in vain; by fair means worse.

Hudibras.

13. Mild: not severe.

Not only dost degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw'st them lower than thou did'st exalt them high.

Milton, S. A.

14. Pleasing; civil.

Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair?
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us,
we must be frighted into our duty.

L' Estrange.

15. Equitable; not injurious.

His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return.

Milton, P. L.

16. Commodious; easy.

Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.
I looked for the jingular veins, opened the fairest, and took away a dozen ounces of blood.

Shakespeare.
Wiseman.

17. Liberal; not narrow.

Carew.

FA'IR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one, though he gallop.

Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair.

Shakespeare.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stopt his mouth with a crust.

L' Estrange.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;

And learn besides of flat'tery to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair.

Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd

To keep it better than the first he made:

Thus fair they parted till the morrow's dawn;

For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn.

Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,

And sooth my heart with pleasing prophecies.

Dryden.

This promised fair at first:

Addison on Italy.

3. Happily; successfully.

O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee;
Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. On good terms.

There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny.

Collier on Popularity.

FAIR. † n. s.

1. A beauty; elliptically, a fair woman.

Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,

He sought the conversation of the fair.

Dryden, Fub.

Gentlemen, who do not design to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair.

2. Honesty; just dealing.

I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves: fair and square, Nic, keeps friends together.

Arbuthnot.

3. Fairness, applied to things. Not now in use.

As the green meads, whose native outward fair
Breathes sweet perfumes into the neighbour air.

Marston, Satires.

4. Fairness, applied to persons. Obsolete. Pope changed the word, in the first of the following passages, without authority, to face.

Let no face be kept in mind,

But the fair of Rosalind.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

My decay'd fair

A sunny look of his would soon repair.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

FAIR. † n. s. [old Fr. fiere; modern, foire; feriae, or forum, Lat.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traffick more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.

With silver, iron, tin, and lead they traded in thy fairs.

Ezek. xxvii. 12.

His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair.

Dryden.

The ancient Nundine, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

FA'IRING. n. s. [from fair.] A present given at a fair.

Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,

If fairings come thus plentifully in.

Like children that esteem every trifle, and prefer a fairing before their fathers.

B. Jonson.

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arose;

Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Our love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

9. Softly; gently.

But sober Guyon hearing him so rayle,
Though somewhat moved in his mighty heart,
Yet with strong reason master'd passion fraile,
And passed fairly forth. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 40.

But here she comes; I fairly step aside,
And hearken, if I may, her business here. Milton, Comus.

FA'IRNESS.† n. s. [from fair, Sax. prægnnes.]

1. Beauty; elegance of form.

That which made her fairness much the fairer, was that it was but a fair ambassador of a most fair mind, full of wit, and a wit which delighted more to judge itself than to show itself. Sidney.

2. Honesty; candour; ingenuity.

There may be somewhat of wisdom, but little of goodness or fairness in this conduct. Atterbury, Sermon Pref.

3. Clearness; not foulness; as "fairness of weather."

FAIRSPOKEN.† adj. [from fair and speak.] Bland and civil in language and address.

Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subletwitted and a marvellous fairstspoken man, but discontented that we should be placed before him in honour, whose superiour he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

F A I

From his cradle

He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one,
Exceeding wise, fairstspoken, Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.
These his fairstspoken words shall be here fairly confronted. Milton, Rinaldo.

He is one of the fairstspoken swordmen that David speaks of,
"whose words are softer than butter, and yet are they very swords." Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

FA'IRY.† n. s. [pephð, Saxon; fee, French.]

"Ab Æga, terra, sit & pēga Macedonum dialecto; unde ivagoi, ivægoi, & Romanis inferi, qui Scoto-Saxonibus dicuntur feries, nostratiqu; vulgo corruptius fairies, καταχθονιοι δαιμονες, sive dii manes." Baxter's Glossary. So far Dr. Johnson. But the Sax. pephð will not apply in the sense of a spirit to these pretended beings; for it means the mind or soul. Perhaps the old Fr. faerie, a fantom, a spectre, is the parent of our word. The French word is sometimes written féerie, and Borel derives it from the ancient fée, a nymph, and also a diviner. The French have likewise the old verb faer, to enchant. See Lacombe and Roquefort. Probably from the Lat. faturo. "Par féerie," says Cotgrave, is "by appointment of the fairies;" which also he renders fatal and destined. Some indeed suppose the Latin fatum to be the etymon; whence fata, in Italian, a fairy, witch, or enchantress; and the low Lat. fada, a kind of demon. The French fae or fee is also found to have been used for a diviner or enchanter. The Irish faidh is a foreteller, a prophet. Fairy has been, after all, considered as derived from the east, that is, from the peri, the imaginary beings of the Persians. See ELF and FAY.]

1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.

Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white. Shakespeare.

Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairylike too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape profane. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

By the idea any one has of fairies, or centaurs, he cannot know that things, answering these ideas, exist. Locke.

Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear! Pope.

2. Enchantress. Warburton.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

FA'IRY. adj.

1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fairy favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Such borrowed wealth, like fairy money, though it were gold in the hand from which he received it, will be but leaves and dust when it comes to use. Locke.

2. Belonging to fairies.

This is the fairy land: oh, spight of spights,
We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish apights. Shakespeare.

FA'IRYLIKE.* adj. Imitating the practice of fairies.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairylike, to pinch the unclean knight.
Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

FA'IRYSTONE. n. s. [fairy and stone.] A stone found in gravel pits.

F A I

FA'ISIBLE.* See FEASIBLE.

FAITH. † n. s. [foi, French; fede, Italian; fides, Latin. So Dr. Johnson traces our word. Mr. Horne Tooke asserts, that it is the third person singular of the indicative of the Sax. verb fægan, to engage, to covenant. viz. fæð; and that our word was formerly written faieth, which indeed was common enough. Others consider it as connected with the Greek πίστις, persuasion, belief.]

1. Belief of the revealed truths of religion.

The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs have reference unto some uttered word, as the object of belief.

Faith, if it have not works, is dead. Hooker.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of that faith in this life, or that faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Jam. ii. 17.

Then faith shall fail, and holy hope shall die; One lost in certainty, and one in joy. Hammond, Pract. Catech.

2. The system of revealed truths held by the Christian church; the credenda.

Felix heard Paul concerning the faith. Acts, xxiv. 24.
This is the catholic faith. Ath. Creed, Comm. Prayer.

3. Trust in God.

Faith is an entire dependence upon the truth, the power, the justice, and the mercy of God; which dependence will certainly incline us to obey him in all things. Prior.

4. Tenet held.

Which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason, without miracle,
Should never plant in me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. Trust in the honesty or veracity of another.

6. Fidelity; unshaken adherence.

Her faith, while her faith to me remains,
I should conceal. Milton, P. L.

Bread with the bean perhaps, and broken meat;
Fall on, and try thy appetite to eat. Dryden, Pers.

58. To FALL on. To make an assault; to begin the attack.

They fell on, I made good my place: at length they came to th' broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Fall on, fall on, and hear him not!

But spare his person for his father's sake. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Draw all; and when I give the word, fall on. Oedipus.

He pretends amongst the rest, to quarrel with me, to have fallen foul on priesthood. Dryden, Fal. Pref.

59. To FALL over. To revolt; to desert from one side to the other.

And dost thou now fall over to my foes?

Thou, wear a lion's hide! doff it, for shame,
And hang a calve's skin on those recreant limbs.

Shakspeare, K. John.

60. To FALL out. To quarrel; to jar; to grow contentious.

Little needed those proofs to one who would have fallen out with herself, rather than make any conjectures to Zelmace's speeches. Sidney.

How fell you out, say that?

— No contraries hold more antipathy,

Than I and such a knave.

Shakspeare, K. Lear

Meeting her of late behind the wood,

Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool,

'I did upbraid her, and fall out with her.

Shakspeare.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians, who had elected him to be their king. Howell.

A soul exasperated in ill, falls out

With every thing, its friend, itself.

Addison, Cato.

It has been my misfortune to live among quarrelsome neighbours: there is but one thing can make us fall out, and that is the inheritance of lord Strut's estate. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

61. To FALL out. To happen; to befall.

Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be?

Sidney.

Now, for the most part, it so falleth out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardliet able to bring proof of their certainty. Hooker.

It so fell out, that certain players

We o'er-rod on the way; of those we told him. Shakspeare.

Yet so it may fall out, because their end

Is hate, not help to me.

Milton, S. A.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L'Estrange.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Tillotson.

62. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat.

The men were fashion'd in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;
Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;
Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden, Juv.

63. To FALL to. To apply himself to.

They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney.

I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers:

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Having been brought up an idle horseboy, he will never after fall to labour; but is only made fit for the halter. Spenser.

They fell to raising money under pretence of the relief of Ireland. Clarendon.

My lady falls to play: so bad her chance,

He must repair it.

Pope.

64. To FALL to. To submit himself to; to go over to.

He that abideth in this city, shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live.

Jerem. xxi. 9.

65. To FALL under. To be subject to; to become the subject of.

We know the effects of heat will be such as will scarce fall under the conceit of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Those things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our deliberation. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the mind, by imitation of which imagined form all things are represented, which fall under human sight. Dryden, Desiresway.

66. To FALL under. To be ranged with; to be reckoned with.

No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the Georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader. Addison on the Georgicks.

67. To FALL upon. To attack; to invade; to assault.

Auria falling upon these galleys, had with them a cruel and deadly fight. Knolles.

An infection in a town falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases; but, spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy. Temple.

Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or a mushroom can escape him. Addison, Spect.

To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope to Swift.

68. To FALL upon. To attempt.

I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder on Time.

69. To FALL upon. To rush against.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

70. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.

To FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like.

To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakspeare, Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halfs, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To yearn; to bring forth.

They, then conceiving, did in yearning time

Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakspeare.

FALL. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again, and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the fall be broken, by means of a son, or otherwise, stays above; and if not mingled, it evereth not again, as oil doth. Locke.

A fever of fall may take away my reason. Locke.

Some were hurt by the fall they got by falling upon the ground. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Wail his fall,

Whom I myself struck down.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith, viii. 9.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;

Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,

Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.

6. Downfal; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness; or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall.

Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and dost enquire

Of my restraint; why here I live alone;

And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel, Civil Wars.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate;

Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;

Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,

Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnell.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles, the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of musick.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:

O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South

That breathes upon a bank of violets,

Stealing and giving odours. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings

Of silence, through the empty vaulted night;

At every fall smoothing the raven down

Of darkness till it smil'd! Milton, Comus.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,

And see the shepherds feed their flocks

By shallow rivers, to whose falls

Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakspeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisdom, xxi. 18.

Down through the crannies of the living walls

The crystal streams descend in autumn falls. Dryden, Virg.

The swain, in barren desert, with surprise

Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;

And starts, amidst the thorny wild, to see

New falls of water murmuring in his ear. Pope, Mæon.

New under hanging mountains,

Beside the falls of fountains,

He makes his home.

And calls her shore

For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope, St. Cecilia.

That great Northumberland, then false to him,

Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

F A L

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would warned be

Of craft, coloured with simplicity;

And such end, perdie, does all them remain,

That of such falsers' friendship been fain.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

FALSETTO. * [Ital.] A musical term; a feigned voice.

The mock heroick falsetto of stupid tragedy.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

FA'LSIFIABLE. † adj. [Old Fr. falsifiable.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted. Cotgrave.

FA'LSIFICA'TION. n. s. [falsification, French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous.

Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications: except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour.

Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification.

Broomie.

FA'LSIFICATOR. * n. s. [Lat. falsificator.] A falsifier.

He discovereth a malign itch to have made me a falsificator like himself.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 175.

FA'LSIFIER. † n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

Huloet.

That punishment which is appointed for the forgers and falsifiers of the king's coin.

Ascham, Toxophil. B. 1.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.

Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their shams the worst together.

L'Estrange.

TO FA'LSIFY. † v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, proposeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.

Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.

Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balances by deceit.

Amos, viii. 5.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction.

Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which it is thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled.

Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selmeys the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.

Knollet, Hist.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust.
Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lines fill'd. Dryden, Æn.

Of this word Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there; why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si Græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make my meaning plain:

Ma si l' Usbergo d'Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received. Johnson.

The word certainly deserves not to be received in this sense; but it appears to have been a phrase of the fencing-school for thrust, from a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher, which Dryden probably had once noticed, (for he had the highest opinion of the language of these dramatists,) but had forgotten. Dr. Johnson says, that he had once seen the word copied; but he was not aware, that Dryden himself was a copier.

How can he stand
Upon his guard, who' hath fidlers in his head,
To which his feet must ever be a dancing?
Beside a falsify may spoil his cringe,
Or making of a leg, in which consists
Much of his court-perfection. Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

To FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY.† n. s. [faulseté, old French; falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the world wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

By falsities and lies the greatest part
Of mankind they corrupted.

Milton, P. L.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glanville, Scipio.

To FA'LTEER v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish, vaulttur, a stammerer, Icelandic, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Spenser, F. Q.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakspeare, Rich. II.
He found his legs falter. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

To FA'LTEER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and oats. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FA'LTEERING.* n. s. [from falter.] Feebleness; deficiency.

The deliquium and faltering of our spirits, the violence and torment of bodily pains. Killingbeck's Serm. p. 238.

FA'LTEERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE.† v. a. [Goth. fimbul, stuttering; Danish, famber.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner, Dr. Johnson says; but it is in Sherwood's old dictionary, viz. "to famble with the mouth, beguayer," i. e. to speak imperfectly; as also with its descendants, "a fambling," and "a fambler." Cotgrave also renders beguayer, "to famble, to maffle in the mouth, to speak as a child that but begins to speak." And this strengthens my opinion, that our northern word faffle is a corruption of the present. See To FAFFLE.

FAME.† n. s. [fame, old French; fama, Latin; φάμα, Dorick.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron. xxii. 5.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison, Spect.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Jos. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

To FAME.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make famous.

Your second birth
Will fame old Lethe's flood. B. Jonson, Masque of Christmas.
Pythee, who fames thee? Beaum. and Fl. King and no King.

2. To report.

That Richard — should fame king Edward the fourth a bastard. Sir G. Buck, Hist. K. Rich. III. p. 82.

F A M

FA'MED. part. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode,
Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. † adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown.

May he die fameless and forgot. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May, Virgil.

FAMILIAR. † adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell.

Shakespeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalander straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us choose such noble counsel,

That war, or peace, or both at once, may be

As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Our sweet

Recess, and only consolation left

Familiar to our eyes!

Milton, P. L.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive

Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton, P. L.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;

Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope, Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins

His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spoke it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Chambers.

9. Often applied, in the Bible, to spirits, supposed by some to allude to those who imposed on mankind by pretending to have a spirit or demon speaking from within their bodies.

Thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit.

Isaiah, xxxix. 4.

FAMILIAR. n. s.

F A M

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakespeare.
When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiar, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love.

Shakespeare.

FAMILIARITY. n. s. [familiarité, French; from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIARIZE. † v. a. [familiarizer, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

Being familiarized to it, men are not shocked at it.

Butler, Analogy of Religion.

Whethamstede, the learned and liberal abbot of St. Alban's, being desirous of familiarizing the history of his patron saint to the monks of his convent. Warton, Hist. of E. P. ii. 53.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison, Spect.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your sawciness will jest upon my love. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Shakespeare.

The Governour came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair, and sat him down. Bacon, New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh, History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,

And without method talks us into sense;

Will, like a friend, familiarly convey

The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMILISM.  n. s.* [from family.] The tenets of a deluded sect called the family of love, by their artful founder, H. Nicholas, a Westphalian, who introduced his doctrine into England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and occasioned no small confusion, as the history of that reign shews.

We see one tainted with popery, — another with familism; and all these run a madding after their own fancies.

B. Hall, Rom. p. 5.

FAMILIST.  n. s.* [from family.]

1. One of the sect called the family of love.

Though the familists, libertines, and anabaptists, stand in opposition to papists; yet the great Fowler of souls catches them all with the same foul birdlime of impure lusts.

Pagitt, Hecynography, p. 208.

2. A master of a family.

If you will needs be a familist, and marry, master not the want of issue among your greatest afflictions.

Osborn, Advice to a Son, (1658,) p. 70.

FAMILLE. [en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

F A M

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tote à tote;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit where'er you will.

Swift.

FA'MILY. n. s. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat.

Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor;
a race; a tribe; a generation.

*Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites. Numb. iii. 21.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go and complain thy family is young,
Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long.

Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FA'MINE. n. s. [famine, French; fames, Latin.]

Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Famines have not been of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God.

Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from james, Latin; jumis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shakespeare.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus that labours up the hill
The rolling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread. Milton, P. L.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shakespeare.

FA'MISHMENT. † n. s. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

So sore was the famishment in the land.
Gen. xlvii. 13. Mathew's Transl.

Laugh and be fat, sith all you touch is gold,
Though that food your soul's famishment affords.
Daniel, Wil's Pilgrimage, sign. V. a. b.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions, yet when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drunk'st. Hakewill on Providence.

FAMO'SITY. n. s. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity.

Dict.

FA'MOUS. † adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

Numb. xvi. 2.

F A N

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgement upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things;
as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears,
and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peascham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famous
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton, S. A.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification; and imports fame, whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menus, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Sometimes, notorious; like the Lat. famosus, which has also the sense of infamous.

The death of slaves and famous malefactors.
Tillotson, Sermon on 1 John, iv. 9.

FA'MOUSED.  adj.* Renowned; much talked of;
famous.

The painful warrior *famous*ed for fight.
Shakespeare, Sonnet, 25.

The wine is indeed the most generous grape of Persia, and *famous*ed all over the Orient. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 130.

FA'MOUSLY. † adv. [from famous.]

1. With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was *famous*ly enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
They looked on the particulars as things *famous*ly spoken of,
and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read.

Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

2. Notoriously.

He had never been praised by Gabriel Harvey for his labour, if therein he had not been so *famous*ly absurd.

Nash, Apol. of Pierce Penitence, (1593.)

FA'MOUSNESS. † n. s. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

Famousness, unattended with endearing causes, is a quality so undesirable, that even infamy and folly can confer it.

Boyle, Style of H. Script, p. 126.

To FA'MULATE.  v. n.* [famulus, Latin.] To serve.

This word is in the vocabulary of Cockram.
Chaucer has "famuler foe," for domestick foe,
March. Tale. And the word famulist is in use at Queen's College in Oxford for an inferior member of it.

FA'MULIST.  See To FAMULATE.*

FAN. † n. s. [fann, Saxon; wannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scars, and fans, and double change of bravery,
With amber fracelets, beads, with all this knavery. Shakespeare.
'Tis a sweet walk; and if the wind be stirring,
Serves like a fan to cool. Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame.

Gay.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins shill'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base:

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. La Fontaine.

FAN

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [van, French.]

Flail, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong.

Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Tusser.
Isaiah, xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with sails. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'n'r, with a spring, from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The air

Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
Till ev'n. Milton, P. L.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose.

Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves.

Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate; as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgement. Milton, Ps. i. 11.

FANATICAL.* adj. [Lat. fanaticus.] Enthusiastick; wild; mad.

I cannot but earnestly desire, and pray for, an effectual reformation of manners and propagation of the Gospel by all sober and christian methods; but may venture to foretel, without pretending to the spirit of prophecy, that this great work will never be accomplished by an enthusiastick and fanatical head.

Bp. Lavington, Enthusiasm of Metho. and Papists compared, Pref.

FANATICALLY.* adv. [from fanatical.] In a wild enthusiastick way.

The liberty they pursued was a liberty from order, from virtue, from morals, and from religion; and was neither hypocritically nor fanatically followed. Burke.

FANATICALNESS.* n. s. [from fanatical.] Religious frenzy.

That temper of profaneness, whereby a man is disposed to contemn and despise all religion, how slightly soever men may think of it, is much worse than infidelity, than fanaticism, than idolatry; and of the two 'tis much more eligible for a man to be an honest heathen and a devout idolater, than a profane christian.

Wilkins, on Nat. Relig. ii. 1.

FANATICISM. n. s. [from fanatick.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monst'rous shapes and sorceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton, P. L.

FANA'TICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatick. Decay of Piety.

FAN'CIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.
It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth, Pref. to Ovid.

FAN'CIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

What conceited old man is this, said he, that talks thus fancifully? More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

FAN'CIFULNESS. n. s. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

FANCY. n. s. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία, Gr.] It should be phansy.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton, L' All.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief; among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge or opinion. Milton, P. L.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgement of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea: conception of things.

F A N

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.
For you, fair Hernia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.
A resemblance of humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is ingender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbuthnot.
One that was just ent'ring upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

To FA'NCY.† v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

The heart fancieth as a woman's heart in travail. Eccles. xxxiv. 5.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spral, Serm.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden, Juv.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgement and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh, Hist.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FA'NCYFRAMED.* adj. [fancy and framed.] Created by fancy.

He his own fancyframed foe defies;
In rage, "My arms, give me my arms," he cries! Crashaw, Poems, p. 53.

FA'NCYFREE.* adj. [fancy and free.] Free from the power of love. See the sixth sense of FANCY.

The imperial votaries passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancyfree. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

F A N

FA'NCYMONGER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns; and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, denifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakespeare, As you like it.

FA'NCYSICK.† adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

All fancysick she is, and pale of chear.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable;
and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when us true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FANDA'NGO.* n. s. [Spanish.] A kind of very lively dance which the Spaniards have learned from the Indians. V. Cormon, Dict. Sobrin. Aumentado, Antwerp, 1769. Labat, the French missionary, says it was brought from Guinea by the negroes into the West Indies, and thence into Spain.

Our evening ended with a ball, where we had for the first time the pleasure of seeing the fandango danced. It is odd and entertaining enough, when they execute with precision and agility all the various footings, wheelings of the arms, and crackings of the fingers; but it exceeds in wantonness
all the dances I ever beheld.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain. L. 6.

FANE. n. s. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privileges! Shakespeare, Coriol.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden, Æn.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FANFARE.* n. s. [French.] A sounding of trumpets, or a coming into the lists with sound of trumpets; hence also any publick bravado, or flourish; any loud-resounding brag, or ostentation. Cotgrave. See FANFARON, which Menage traces to an Arabick expression.

Fanfare [is] a sort of military air or flourish, commonly short and lively, which is performed by trumpets, and imitated by other instruments. Appendix to Mus. Dict. (1769), p. 20.

FANFARON. n. s. [French, from the Spanish.] Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. Dryden on Dram. Poetry.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in sets of verses; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estrange.

F A N

FANFARONA'DE.† n. s. [fanfaronnade, Fr.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of Monsieur Bouffeurs. Swift.

To FANG.† v. a. [Goth. fang, seizure, Screnius; Sax. fangen, seized, from pengan; Dutch, vangen, Germ. fangen, to seize.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire.

Destruction fang mankind! Shakespeare, Timon.

FANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmon, and dogs, though less. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd falls headlong on the plain. Dryden, Ovid.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison, Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn, Kalendar.

FANG'ED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Philips, Briton.

FANGLE.† n. s. [from pengan, Sax. to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as. new fangles, new fangleness. So far Dr. Johnson, who cites no example. But it is used, without the epithet new, and in the sense of any trifle; and, as Mr. Pegge has also observed, may be considered a cant or arbitrary word rather than deduced from the Sax. pengan, or from a fanciful etymon assigned to newfangle. See NEW-FANGLED.

There was no feather, no fangle, jem, nor jewel, — left behind. Greene, Mamillia, (1583.)

A hatred to fangles and the French fooleries of his time. Wood, Ath. Ox. ii. col. 456.

FAN'GLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore now fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in progress incessant. Johnson.

A book I oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakespeare, Cymb.

F A N

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FA'NGOT. n. s. A quantity of wares; as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters. Dict.

FANNEL.† n. s. [fanon, Fr. See FANON.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

Item, a suite of vestmentes of blew velvet, or frised with needle worke, with albes, stoles, and fannels agreeable to the same. Will of Sir T. Pope, Life, p. 338.

FANNER.† n. s. [from fan.]

1. One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her.

Jerem. li. 2.

2. A winnow of corn. Barret.

FANNING.* n. s. [from fan.] Ventilation. Hulvet.
He will be often very agreeably entertained with grateful sounds in the natural musick of birds, the fannings of woods, the purling of streams, or the falls of water.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

FA'NON.* n. s. [Fr. fanon; low Lat. fano; Goth. fana; Lat. pannus.]

1. A sort of ornament, worn about the arm of a mass-priest; the fannel. See FANNEL.

Tunics, stoles, fanons, and mitres.

Bale on the Revel. P. ii. sign. k. vj. b.

2. A banner; and in blazon, any large bracelet that hangs down in fashion of the maniple, or fanon aforesaid, from the arm. Cotgrave.

FANTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land;

I found the people strangely fantasied. Shakespeare, K. John.

FA'NTASM.† n. s. [fantasme, old Fr. phantasma, Lat. See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL.† } adj. [fantastique, French; }
FANTA'STICK. } from fantasy.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,

Shakes so my single state of man, that function

Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,

But what is not. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally. Thus fantastical colours are the same as emphatical. See EMPHATICAL.

Are ye fantastick, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye shew? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Many of them [young wouders] shall be fantastick, deriving the eye like the tricks of jagers. Such were the rods and serpents of Pharaoh's enchanters, which were deriv'd of Aaron's rod; because they were but shadows, and not a substance. Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 307.

An aerial fantastick body.

Southey's Sermon, vii. 16.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.
Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.
5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastick mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd concealed true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Duamvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife. Tatler.

We are apt to think your metallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.
2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.
One cannot so much as fantastically choose, even or odd, he thinks not why. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

FANTA'STICALNESS.† } n. s. [from fantastical.]
FANTA'STICKNESS.

1. Humourousness; mere compliance with fancy.
Vain Delight, thou feeder of my follies
With light fantastickness, be thou in favour!
Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in One.
2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.
I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.
3. Caprice; unsteadiness.
Nor is this corruption happened to the Greek language, as it useth to happen to others, either by the law of the conquerour, or inundation of strangers; but it is insensibly crept in by their own supine negligence and fantastickness. Howell, Lett. ii. 57.

FANTA'STICK.* n. s. A fantastick, conceited, or whimsical person.

A vain fantastick, that takes proud clothes to be part of himself.
New-fangled toys, and trimming slight
Which takes our late fantasticks with delight.
Milton, Fac. Exercise.

FANTA'STICKLY.* adv. [from fantastick.] Irrationally; whimsically.

He is neither too fantastickly melancholy, or too rashly choleric. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

FANTASY. n. s. [fantasie, Fr. phantasia, Lat. phantasia, Gr.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Beget of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unstable than the wind.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Go you, and where you find a maid
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Hail up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy.

Shakespeare.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,

Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, for a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies' ears to fantasies impure. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whiggist.

To FANTASY.* v. a. [from the noun; old Fr. fantasier.] To like; to fancy.

Fantasying, or having a mind to, a thing. Halset.
The king, during his favour, fantasied so much his daughter, that almost all things began to grow out of frame. Cavendish, Life of Walsey.

FA'NTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakespeare.

FA'QUIR.* n. s. [Arab.] A kind of Mahometan religious; a sort of dervis; travelling about, and collecting alms. Written also fakir and fakeer, and usually pronounced with the accent on the last syllable.

Such ill-tim'd gravity, such serious folly,
Might well befit the solitary student,
Th' unpractis'd dervise, or sequester'd faqir. Johnson, Irene.

FAR.† adv. [Sax. feop, far; feoppe, farther; feoppest, farthest or farthest; and our comparative was formerly ferret, as our superlative was ferrest or farrest; "then walked I ferret," P. Plowman's Crede;—"a vice—farrest from humanity," Sir T. Elyot, Governour; Chaucer, "ferrest," Prol. C. T. fairra, Goth. fara, Icel. to depart, to go away.]

1. To great extent in length.
Pay sacred reverence to Appollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great—
Is what I love: the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.

With costly cates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Thou with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind. Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Eestes came,
The far fam'd brother of th' enchantress dante. Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factions for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny. Dryden, Rn.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friend's affection either ceased or prevailed. Sidney.
In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon, Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts, and notions vain.

Milton, P. L.
I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice. Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden, Virgil.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe. Dryden, Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.

Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world. Addison, Ovid.

5. To a distance.

As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him. Ps. ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and remov'd his tents far off. Milton, P. L.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet, Theory.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart. Addison, Ovid.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent.
Judg. xix. 11.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world. Bacon, New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With youth immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope, Odyssey.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

— You speak him far.

— I don't extend him, sir.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

Answer them

How far forth you do like their articles. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. FAR off. At a great distance.

For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton, P. L.

11. FAR off. To a great distance.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
Wale-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton, P. L.

12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. FAR is used often in composition: as, far-shooting, far-seeing.

FAR-ABOUT.* n. s. A going out of the way; a departure from the subject.

What need these far-about's? They go the shortest cut, who give him [the pope] a temporal power over all the kingdoms of the world! Fuller, Holy War, p. 280.

FAR-FETCH. n. s. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem.
A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick far-fetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudibras.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the far-fetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

For far-fetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts, Logic.

FAR-FET.* adj. [far and fet, our old word for fetch.] Dr. Johnson, in two instances, converted this word into far-fetched, without authority.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Your far-fet viands please not.
Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

The far-fet spoil. Milton, P. R.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained.

York, with all his far-fet policy.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.
Metaphors, far-fet, hinder to be understood.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.
FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

F A R

Atlas, her sire, to whose far-piercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres. Pope, Odyss.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the far-shooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryden, Æn.

FAR. adj.

1. Distant; remote.

A man taking a far journey. St. Mark, xiii. 34.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;
And some to far Oaxis shall be sold,
To try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden, Virg.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses,
The far side from the near. Dryden, Cleomenes.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as,

The nations far and near contend in choice. Dryden.

FAR. n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tusser.

To FARCE. † v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcer, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients. This was formerly a common word in cookery, and is now converted into forced. So farsure was used for stuffing. See Pegge's Forme of Cury.

His tippet was ay farced ful of knives,
And pinnes, for to given sayre wives. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
I should pass the limits of a large book, farsed with only testimonies to that end.

Anderson, Expos. on Benedict. (1573.) fol. 33.
What

Broken piece of matter so o'er she's about, the name,
Palamon lards it, that she farces every business.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kins.

Some used to embalm the belly cleansed with wine, farced with cassia, myrrh, and other spices.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 308.

The first principles of Christian Religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Bp. Sanderison.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterrissed robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running fore the king. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

FARCE. † n. s. [Fr. farce, "a fond and dissolute play, comedie, or interlude; also the jig at the end of an interlude, wherein some prettie knaverie is acted; also a pudding, &c. any stuffing in meats." Cotgrave. Some think the theatrical word derived from the culinary one; yet farcer, to laugh, to ridicule, is very old in the French language, from the Celtick farce, mockery.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.

They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce.

Gay.

FARCICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farcical, because they are actually in nature. Gay, Pref. to the What d'ye Call it.

FARCICALLY.* adv. [from farcical.] In a manneruitable only to a farce.

It is not necessary, that in order to do this he should have recourse to images that are farcically low. Langhorne.

FARCING.* n. s. [from farce.] The act of stuffing with mixed ingredients.

To make broth and farcings, and that full dainty.

Interl. of Jacob and Esau, (1568.)

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcings of that fable.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FARCY. n. s. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.]

The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

To FARD.* v. a. [Fr. farder.] To paint; to colour. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

There of the farded fop and essenc'd beau,

Ferocious, with a Stoick's frown disclose

Thy manly scorn.

Shenstone, Economy, P. II.

FARDEL. † n. s. [fardello, Italian; fardeau, Fr.]

A bundle; a little pack.

Some assayed to swim; some holding fast by the horses, others by spears and other like weapons, many upon fardeles and trusses, gat over the river. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 56. b.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Who would fardeles bear,

To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To FARDEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make up in bundles.

Things, orderly fardel up under heads, are most portable.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 164.

To FARE. † v. n. [Japan, Saxon; varen, Dutch; faren, Goth; far, a journey, Icel.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,

Until the blustering storm is overblown.

Spenser, F. Q.

His spirits pure were subject to our sight,

Like to a man in shew and shape he fares.

Fairfax.

So on he fares, and to the border comes

Of Eden.

Milton, P. L.

Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;

Still hear'd their hearts.

Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.

Spenser, F. Q.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil at that art.

Booke, II. 26.

Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight

Presents that beauty.

Wallen.

So in this through bright Sacharissa far'd
Oppress'd by those who strove to be our guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral.

Waller.

So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.

Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruise'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose.

Hudibras.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.

L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd.

Dryden, Æn.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and unimosities of the nation.

Addison, Freeholder.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours.

Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad. [Fr. faire.]

Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight.

Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends.

Milton, P. R.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand.

South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fared sumptuously every day.

St. Luke, xvi. 19.

Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound.

Shakespeare, Timon.

Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FARE.† n. s. [Sax. fare.]

1. Journey; passage. This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has not at all noticed. See the etymology of the verb.

He straitway

Himself unto his journey gan prepare,
And all his armours readie dight that day,
That nought the morrow next mote stay his fare.

Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 16.

2. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water.
Used only of that which is paid for the person,
not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarshish.

Jonah, i. 3.

He passage began with unregarded pray'r,
And waxes two farthings to discharge his fare.

Dryden, Juv.

3. The person carried; another sense unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. This is rather a colloquial expression.

The skiffs—pass each other with incredible ease and agility;
so that the fare runs no risk of being overset.

Drummond, Trav. (1744.) p. 68.

4. Food prepared for the table; provisions. [Fr.
faire.]

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet'st, after such delicious fare.

Milton, P. L.

But when the western winds with vital pow'r,
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare.

Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice:
He that would more be covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophical fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please.

Dryden, Juv.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily.

Addison, Guardian.

FAREWELL.† adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well;
"sis felix, abi in bonam rem; or bene sit tibi;"
but in time use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left. So the Sw. farväl, and the Dutch vaarwel. It may be observed that the accent is placed, both in the adverb and substantive, indifferently on either syllable, as the examples shew.
Dr. Johnson places, in both, the accent on the last syllable. But it is well remarked by Mr. Nares that the accent on the first syllable of the substantive, and on the second of the adverb, ought to be the permanent distinction.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; with thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,

Therefore our everlasting farewell take;

For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Shakespeare.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,

For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight.

Dryden, Virg.

Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell.

Dryden.

O queen, farewell! be still possessat

Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest!

Pope, Odys.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year which threaten'd so

The fairest light the world can show,

Treading the path to nobler ends,

A long farewell to love I gave;

Resolv'd my country and my friends

All that remain'd of me should have.

Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence: I will not use many words with you: fare you well, gentlemen, both.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FAREWELL.† n. s.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If chance the radiant sun, with farewell sweet,

Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,

The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds

Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring.

Milton, P. L.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,

As on this very spot of earth I fell.

Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly.

Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title.

Spectator.

FARINACEOUS.† adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, &c. rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

FARM. n. s. [ferme, French; peopm, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.

It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spencer.

To FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. To take at a certain rate.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farm'd of the king. Camden, Rem.

3. To cultivate land.

FARMABLE.  adj.* [from farm.] That may be farmed. Sherwood.

FARMER. † n. s. [fermier, French; or from farm; Sax. peopmep.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.

Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakespeare.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.

Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer.

3. One who rents any thing; as, farmer of the post-horse duties.

To side with the farmers against the improvement of the revenue. Ld. Halifax.

FARMOST. n. s. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden, En.

FARNES. n. s. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their farness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the uttermost number of able hands to fight. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FARRAGINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Lat.] Formed of different materials.

Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FARRAGO. † n. s. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.

He holds — their causes a farrago,
Or a made dish in court; a thing of nothing.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

I return you my most thankful acknowledgements for that collection, or farrago, of prophecies, as you call them; — specially that of Nostradamus.

Howell, Lett. iii. 22.

These, crudely mixed up, made the farrago of the alcoran.

Locke, Truth of Christianity.

FARREATION.  n. s.* [Latin, farreatio.] Confarreation. See CONFARREATION. Bullockar.

FARRIER. n. s. [ferrier, French; ferrarius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrier, as every groom ought to be, get sack, or strong-beer to rub your horses. Swift.

To FARRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

There are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mortimer.

FARRIERY.  n. s.* [from farrier.] The practice of trimming the feet, and curing the diseases, of horses. The farriers of modern days have dissolved this partnership, applying farriery merely to shoeing horses, and the more stately term of veterinary art to physicking or healing the sick animal.

FARROW. † n. s. [Sax. paeph, a little pig; Sw. farre: Lat. verres.] A litter of pigs.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrow. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FARROW. v. a. To bring forth pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year. Tusser.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bisulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open jaws, as other bisulcous animals. Brown.

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,

As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd

The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden, Juv.

FARSANG.  n. s.* See PHARSANG.

To FARSE.  To stuff.* See To FARCE.

FART. n. s. [pept, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart

Of every heart;

It pains a man when 'tis kept close;

And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

To FART. v. n. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,

Although the bore be ne'er so large,

Before the flame from muzzle burst,

Just at the breach it flashes first;

So from my lord his passion broke,

He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.

FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further, and furthest, from forth, forther, forthest, ponðon, punðep, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; more-over.

To make a perfect judgement of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FARTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written farther.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden, En.

FARTHERANCE. n. s. [more properly furtherance, from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the furtherance that I have obtained. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh, Hist.

TO FARTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had furthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FARTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

FARTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest.] See FARTHER.

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

FARTHING. n. s. [georðung, Saxon, from peoper, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin. A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Else all those things we toil so hard in, Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content, Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden, Juv.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use. Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FARTHINGALE. n. s. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings, With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakespeare.

What compass will you wear your farthingale? Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall Round table, like a farthingale. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages, With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff, A new comode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swift.

FARTHINGSWORTH. n. s. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingsworth of any thing. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

FASCES. n. s. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain, That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more; And shook aloft the fascies of the main, To fight those slaves with what they felt before. Dryden.

FASCIA. n. s. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FASCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. Dict.

FASCIA'TION. n. s. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

Three especial sorts of fasciation, of rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wicman.

TO FASCINATE. v. a. [fascina, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINATION. n. s. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South.

FASCINE. n. s. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successively as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison, Spect.

FASCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Lat.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment. Not in use.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO FASH.* v. a. [old Fr. fuscher, to displease, to molest.] To vex; to teize. A word still in use in the north of England.

FA'SHION.† n. s. [facion, Norm. Fr. façon, Fr.; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. St. Luke, ix. 29.

Stand these poor people's friend. — I will, Or let me lose the fashion of a man. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass, And entertain a score or two of taylor's To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

3. Manner; sort; way.

For that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must advance. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve, And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you What hath proceeded. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayward.

4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestick ornaments.

Here's the note How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat, The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.

Zalmoxis again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprises?

Sidney.

Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy men's reason about it.

 A chapel crown'd, till in the common fate
 Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.
 Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
 Feeds long ring death, but looking not, he dies;
 Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
 Wasting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.
 Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
 But who can bear th' approach of certain fate!
 The whizzing arrow sings,
 And bears thy fate, Atinous, on its wings. Pope.
4. Cause of death.
 With full force his deadly bow he bent,
 And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.

FA'TED. adj. [from fate.]

- FA'THERLY. adj. [from father.] Paternal; like a father; tender; protecting; careful.

F A T

Let me but move one question to your daughter,
And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly. Shakespeare.
The part which describes the fire, I owe to the piety and fatherly affection of our monarch to his suffering subjects. Dryden.

FATHERLY. † adv. In the manner of a father.

There goeth our good shepherd from us, that so faithfully hath taught us, so fatherly hath cared for us.

For, Acts and Mon. of Dr. R. Taylor.

Thus Adam, fatherly displeas'd:

O execrable son! so to aspire

Above his brethren!

Milton, P. L.

FATHOM. † n. s. [pæbem, pæðm, Saxon; Teut. vadem; our own word was formerly written fadom.]

1. A measure of length containing six foot, or two yards; the space to which a man can extend both arms.

The extent of this fathom, or distance between the extremity of the fingers of either hand upon expansion, is equal unto the space between the sole of the foot and crown.

Brown.

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from the end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other, a measure equal to the stature, is named a fathom. Holder.

2. It is the usual measure applied to the depth of the sea, when the line for sounding is called the fathom-line.

Dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Reach; penetration; depth of contrivance; compass of thought.

Another of his fathom they have none

To lead their business.

Shakespeare, Othello.

You have blown his sworn pride to that vastness,

As he believes the earth is in his fathom.

Beaumont and Fl. The Prophetess.

To FATHOM. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compass with the arms extended or encircling.

Hath all his choice commanders drown'd.

Sandys, Paraphr. Exod. xv. (1648.)

You will be swallowed up, horse and man, into a fathomless lake of ill-scented mire. More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

2. That of which the circumference cannot be embraced.

Will you with counters sum

The vast proportion of his infinite;

And buckle in a waist most fathomless,

With spans and inches so diminutive

As fears and reason?

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

FATIDICAL. † adj. [fatidicus, Latin; fatidique, Fr.]

Prophetic; having the power to foretell future events.

The oak, of all other trees only fatidical, told them what a fearful unfortunate business this would prove. Howell, Voc. For.

F A T

If it be true, what the ancients write of some trees, that they are fatidical, these come to foretell, at leastwise to wish, you, as the season invites me, a good new-year.

Howell, Lett. iv. 37.

Fatidical voices, delivered by none knows whom, apparitions of ghosts, omens by words. Spenser on Prodiges, p. 112.

FATIFEROUS. † adj. [fatifer, Latin.] Deadly; mortal; destructive.

1. The quality of being fat, plump, or full-fed.

2. Fat; grease; fulness of flesh.

And by his side rode leathome gluttony,

Deformed creature, on a filthy swine;

His belly was upblown with luxury,

And eke with fatness swollen were his eyes.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. Unctuous or greasy matter.

Earth and water, mingled by the help of the sun, gather a nitrous fatness.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Oleaginousness; sliminess; unctuousness.

But the olive-tree said unto them, Shagid, I leave my fatness wherewith by me they honour God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

Judges, ix. 9.

By reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce metals, wood, pitch, and some fruits.

Arbutnot.

5. Fertility; fruitfulness.

F A T

God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine. Gen. xxvii. 28.

6. That which causes fertility.

When around

The clouds drop fatness, in the middle sky
The dew suspended staid, and left unmolested
The execrable glebe.

Philips.

Vapours and clouds feed the plants of the earth with the balm of dews and the fatness of showers. Bentley.

To FA'TTEN.† v. a. [Sax. fættian.]

1. To feed up; to make fleshy; to plump with fat.

Frequent blood-letting, in small quantities, often increaseth the force of the organs of digestion, and fatteneth and increaseth the distemper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To make fruitful.

Town of stuff to fatten land.

Lib. Londinensis.

Dare not, on thy life,

Touch aught of mine;

This falchion else, not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.

Dryden.

3. To feed grossly; to encrease.

Obscene Orontes

Conveys his wealth to Tyber's hungry shores,

And fattens Italy with foreign whores.

Dryden, Juv.

To FA'TTEN. v. n. [from fat.] To grow fat; to be pampered; to grow fleshy.

All agree to spoil the publick good,

And villains fatten with the brave man's labour.

Otway.

Apollo check'd my pride, and bad me feed

My fat'ning flocks, nor dare beyond the reed.

Dryden.

Yet then this little spot of earth well till'd,

A num'rous family with plenty fill'd,

The good old man and thrifty housewife spent

Their days in peace, and fatten'd with content;

Enjoy'd the dregs of life, and liv'd to see

A long-descending healthful progeny.

Dryden, Juv.

Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,

The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,

And every element exchange its kind,

When thriving honesty in courts we find.

Granville.

FA'TTENER.* See FATNER.

FA'TTINESS.* n. s. [from fatty.] Grossness; fulness

Sherwood.

FA'TRY. adj. [from fat.] Unctuous; oleaginous;
greasy; partaking of the nature of fat.

The like cloud, if oily or fatty will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The gourd

And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive

Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly

Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep

Diverse, detesting contact.

Philips.

The common symptoms of the murietick scurvy are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a lixivial urine, sometimes with a fatty substance like a thin skin atop. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FATUOUS.† adj. [fatuus, Latin.]

1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.

In the same instant that I feel the first attempt of the discase, I feel the victory; in the twinkling of an eye I can scarce see; instantly the taste is insipid and fatuous.

Donne, Devot. (1625.) p. 25.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so.

Granville.

2. Impotent; without force; illusory; alluding to an ignis fatuus.

And when that flame finds combustible earth,

Thence fatuous fires and meteors take their birth.

Denham.

FAULT.† n. s. [old Fr. faute, Lacombe, 1460; faulte, Cotgrave; faute and faut, modern; the third person singular of the indicative of the verb falloir, it fails, fault, i. e. fallit. So the Span.
faltar means to be deficient. The Teut. faute, and the Su. Goth. faat, also signify defect. Dr. Johnson thinks that the l in our word is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute; and that it is in conversation generally suppressed. This I conceive to be not the case; no person of tolerable education would expose himself to the charge of ignorance or affectation by leaving out the l in the pronunciation of fault.]

1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.

The prophet chuath rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hooker.

He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillingsfleet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought,

Contracts the danger of an actual fault:

Then what must he expect that still proceeds

To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds?

Dryden.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.

F A U

They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault. Dryden.

To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensable duty. Atterbury.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought. Pope.

Which of our thrum-cap'd ancestors found fault,
For want of sugar-tongs or spoons for salt? King.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times. Swift.

2. Defect; want; absence.

I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Puzzle; difficulty: as, the enquirer is at a fault.

We are not only at a fault, in the hunters' term; but at a rest, as if we were playing at tennis. Sir H. Wotton, Lett. Rem. p. 550.

4. Misfortune. N t now in use.

Bawd. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live. Marina. The more my fault,
To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die. Shakespeare, Pericles.

To FAULT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.

Which moved him rather in eclogues than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulteth. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

To FAULT.† v. a. To charge with a fault; to accuse.

For that I will not fault thee,
But for humbleness exalt thee. Old Song.

Whom should I fault?
For which only [bodily uncleanness] had they dismissed their wives, our Saviour had neither faulted their gloss nor their practice. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iv. 2.

That which is to be faulted in this particular is, when the grief is immoderate and unreasonable. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 8.

God's house is abused by them which bring lither hawks and dogs, which is faulted in our church-homily. Shelford's Learned Discourses, (1635,) p. 54.

FA'ULTER.† n. s. [from fault.] An offender; one who commits a fault.

Then she, Behold the faultier here in sight;
This hand committed that supposed offence. Fairfax.

With my sweet words I could the King persuade,
And make him pause, and take therein a breath,
Till I, with suit, the faultier's peace had made. Mir. for Mag. p. 499.

To FA'ULTER.* See To FALTER.

FA'ULTFINDER.† n. s. [fault and find.] A censurer; an objector.

Other pleasant fault-finders, who will correct the verb before they understand the noun. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

Be thou no sharn faultfinder, but on admonisher without upbraiding. Tranlatof Bullinger's Sermon. p. 241.

FA'ULTFUL.* adj. [fault and full.] Full of crime.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

FA'ULTILY.† adv. [from faultily.] Not rightly; improperly; defectively; erroneously.

FA'ULTINESS.† n. s. [from faultily.]

1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.

When her judgement was to be practised in knowing faultiness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who running in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney.

2. Delinquency; actual offences.

The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the faultiness of their people heretofore is laid open. Hooker.

3. Imperfection; defect; unfitness for use.

F A V

If these objections are just, what have I done but discovered the faultiness of a commodity, which Mr. Warburton had put off upon them, and they were, though innocently, putting off upon the publick, for good ware? Edwards, Can. of Criticism, Pref.

FA'ULTLESS. adj. [from fault.] Exempt from fault; perfect; completely excellent.

Where for our sins he faultless suffered pain,
There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Fairfax.

Who durst thy faultless figure thus deface! Dryden, Bn.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be. Pope.

FA'ULTLESSNESS.* n. s. [from faultless.] The state of being perfect.

FA'ULTY. adj. [faultif, French, from fault.]

1. Guilty of a fault; blameable; criminal; not innocent.

The king doth speak as one which is faulty. 2 Sam. xiv. 13.

Can thus
The image of God in man, created once
So goodly and erect, though faulty since!
To such unsightly sufferings be debas'd? Milton, P. L.

2. Wrong; erroneous.

The form of polity by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways faulty; faulty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; faulty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; faulty also in urging some things by Scripture mutable, as their lay-elders. Hooker.

3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.

By accident of a faulty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, so that he died presently. Bacon, Hen. VII.

FAUN.* n. s. [Lat. Faunus.] A sort of inferior heathen deity, pretended to inhabit the woods.

Fauns, or sylvans, be of poets feigned to be gods of the wood. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Calendar.

Rough Satyrs danc'd, and Fauns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long. Milton, Lycidas.

FA'UNIST.* n. s. [from faun.] One who attends to rural disquisitions; a naturalist. Modern.

Some future faunist, a man of fortune, will, I hope, extend his visits to Ireland; a new field to the naturalist. White's Selborne, p. 107.

To FA'VOUR.† v. a. [favore, Lat.]

1. To support; to regard with kindness; to be propitious to; to countenance.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Whilst Heaven did favour his felicities,
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol. Spenser, Muirpotmos.

The self-same gods that arm'd the queen of Troy,
May favour Tamora the queen of Goths. Til. Andronicus.

Men favour wonders. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Fortune so favoured him, that the town at his first coming surrendered unto him. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The good Æneus am I call'd; a name,
While fortune favour'd, not unknown to fame. Dryden.

Oh happy youth! and favour'd of the skies,
Distinguish'd care of guardian deities. Pope, Odys.

The complexion of the element
Is favour'd like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

F A V

5. To conduce to; to contribute.

FA'VOUR. n. s. [favor, Latin; faveur, French.]

1. Countenance; kindness; kind regard; propitious aspect: with of before the favourer.

*It pleas'd your majesty to turn your looks
Of favour from myself, and all our house.*

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The child Samuel was in favour, both with the Lord and also with men. 1 Sam. ii. 26.

They got not the land by their own sword; but thy right hand and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hast a favour unto them. Psaln xlv. 3.

His dreadful navy, and his lovely mind,
Gave him the fear and favour of mankind. Waller.

This favour, had it been employed on a more deserving subject, had been an effect of justice in your nature; but, as placed on me, is only charity. Dryden, Aureng. Pref.

2. Support; defence; vindication; inclination to favour: with of before the thing favoured.

The pleasures which these Scriptures ascribe to religion, are of a kind very different from those in favour of which they are here alleged. Rogers.

At play, among strangers, we are apt to find our hopes and wishes engaged on a sudden in favour of one side more than another. Swift.

They were invited from all parts for the use of kings, princes, and ministers. And in short, the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

3. Kindness granted; benevolence shewn.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

The race is not to the swift, nor yet favour to men of skill. Ecc. ix. 11.

O, my royal master!

The gods, in favour to you, made her cruel. A. Philips.

4. Lenity; mildness; mitigation of punishment.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle. Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon.

Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
— Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot. Shakspeare.

Yet ere we enter into open act,
With favour, 'twere no loss if't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be. B. Jonson.

Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace:
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here. Dryden.

6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.

All these his wonderous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favour; him, for whom
All these his works so wond'rous he ordain'd. Milton, P. L.

7. Something given by a lady to be worn.

And every one his lovesuit will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow. Shakspeare.

It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favour, may as well do it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old. Spectator.

8. Any thing worn openly as a token.

Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

9. Feature; countenance. It is now little used.

That is only visible in laying a foul complexion upon a fishy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness. Sidney.

Young though thou art, thine eye
Hath staid upon some favour that it loves. Shakspeare.

Disseat thy favour with an usurped beard. Shakspeare, Othello.

There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

F A V

Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

A youth of fine favour and shape.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls, make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. Ray.

FA'VOURABLE. adj. [favorable, French; favorabilis, Latin.]

1. Kind; propitious; affectionate.

Famous Plantagenet! most gracious prince,
Lend favorable ear to our requests. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. Palliative: tender; averse from censure.

None can have the favorable thought,
That to obey a tyrant's will they fought. Dryden, Jun.

3. Conducive to; contributing to; propitious.

People are multiplied in a country by the temper of the climate, favorable to generation, health, and long life. Temple.

4. Accommodate; convenient.

Many good officers were willing to stay there, as a place very favorable for the making levies of men. Clarendon.

5. Beautiful; well favoured; well featured. Obsolete.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Which do possess the empire of the air,
Was none more favorable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol. Spenser, Muiscopolmos.

FA'VOURABLENESS. n. s. [from favorable.] Kindness; benignity. Sherwood.

To the favorableness of your ladyship's censure — be pleased to add the favour of your pardon.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 198.

FA'VOURABLY. adv. [from favorable.] Kindly; with favour; with tenderness; with kind regard.

Touching actions of common life, there is not any defence more favorably heard than theirs who allege sincerely for themselves, that they did as necessity constrained them. Hooker.

She goeth about seeking such as are worthy of her, and sheweth herself favorably unto them in the ways. Wis. vi.

The violent will condemn the character of Absalom, as either too favorably or too hardly drawn. Dryden.

We are naturally inclined to think favorably of those we love. Rogers.

FA'VOURED. participial adj. [from favour.]

1. Regarded with kindness.

Off with some favoured traveller they stray,
And shine before him all the desert way. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Featured. See the ninth sense of the substantive favour. Always conjoined, with well or ill. Dr. Johnson says, citing only Spenser, and the Bible. But this is not exclusively the case, as the other example, which I add, will shew, and which indeed exhibits a word still common in conversation.

Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which she daily fed;
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs, each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. Spenser, F. Q.

The ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine. Genesis, xli. 4.

Bridget Howd'ye late servant to the lady Fardingle, a short, thick, lively, hard-favoured wench. Tidler, No. 245.

FA'VOUREDLY. adv. [from favoured.] Always joined with well or ill, in a fair or foul way; with good or bad appearance.

FA'VOUREDNESS. n. s. [from favoured.] Usually joined with well or ill; appearance.

Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God any bullock or sheep, wherein is blemish or an evil-favouredness. Deut. xxi. 1.

FA'VOURER. n. s. [from favour.] One who favours; one who regards with kindness or tenderness; a wellwisher; a friend.

If we should upbraid them with irreligious, as they do us with superstitious favourers, the answer which herein they would make us, let them apply unto themselves. Hooker.

Do I not know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Being now a favourer to the Briton. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Conjure their friends they had, labour for more,
Solicit all reputed favourers. Daniel, Civil Wars.

All the favourers of magic were the most profest and bitter enemies to the Christian religion. Addison.

A'VOURITE.† n. s. [favori, favorit, French; favorita, Ital.]

A person or thing beloved; one regarded with favour; any thing in which pleasure is taken; that which is regarded with particular approbation or affection.

A favourite has no friend. Gray.

One chosen as a companion by a superiour; a mean wretch whose whole business is by any means to please.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

I was a Thessalian gentleman, who, by mischance, having killed a favourite of the prince of that country, was pursued so cruelly, that in no place but by favour or corruption they would obtain my destruction. Sidney.

The great man down, you mark, his fav'rite, flies;
The poor advanc'd, makes friends of enemies. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Bid her steal into the plashed bower,
Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes that advance their pride

Against that power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Nothing is more vigilant, nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waning time, and suspect of satiety. Wotton.

This man was very capable of being a great favourite to a great king. Clarendon.

What fav'rites gain, and what the nation owes,
Fly the forgetful world. Pope.

A'VOURITE.* adj. Beloved; regarded with favour.

The two following examples stand in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary as illustrations of the substantive; and of the adjective no notice is taken.

Every particular master in criticism has his favourite passages in an author. Addison, Spect.

So fathers speak, persuasive speech and mild;
Their sage experience to the favourite child. Pope, Odyssey.

A'VOURITISM.* n. s. [from favourite.] Exercise of power by favourites.

A plan of favouritism for our executory government is essentially at variance with the plan of our legislature.

Burke, Thoughts on the Pres. Discontents.

FA'VOURLESS. adj. [from favour.]

Unfavoured; not regarded with kindness; having no patronage; without countenance.

Unfavouring; unpropitious.

Of that goddess I have sought the sight,
Yet no where can her find; such happiness
Heaven doth me envy, and fortune favourless. Spenser, F. Q.

FA'USEN. n. s. A sort of large eel.

He left the waves to wash;

The wave sprung entrails about which fousens and other fish
Did shole. Chapman, Iliads.

FUSSEBRAYE. n. s. A small mount of earth, four fathom wide, erected on the level round the foot of the rampart, to fire upon the enemy, when he is so far advanced that you cannot force him back; and also to receive the ruins which the cannons make in the body of the place. Flaminius.

FA'UTOR. n. s. [fautor, Fr.] Favourer; countenancer; supporter.

I am neither author or fautor of any sect: I will have no man addict himself to me; but, if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's, not mine. B. Jonson.

The new mountain in the Lucrine lake, which is alleged, by the fautors of this opinion, as an instance in behalf of it, was not raised thus. Woodward.

FA'UTRESS. n. s. [fautrix, Lat. fautrice, Fr.] A woman that favours, or shows countenance.

It made him pray, and prove Minerva's aid his fautress still. Chapman, Iliads.

He comes from banishment to the fautress of liberty, from the barbarous to the polite. Garth, Dedic. to Ovid.

FAWN.† n. s. [faun, Fr. from fan, in old Fr. a child, probably from infans, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. Fan is the old French word for a fawn itself, or for the young of any beast. V. Cotgrave in FAN. Borel derives it from infans.] A young deer.

Looking my love, I go from place to place,
Like a young faun that late hath lost the hind;
And seek each where, where last I saw her face,
Whose image yet I carry fresh in mind. Spenser, Sonnets.

The buck is called the first year a fawn, the second year a pricket. Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Who for thy table feeds the wanton faun,
For him as kindly spreads the flow'ry lawn. Pope.

To FAWN.* v. n. [Fr. faonner.] To bring forth a fawn. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The does then do fawn. Bullakar, in V. Fencemouth.

To FAWN.† v. n. [of uncertain original; perhaps a contraction of the French fanfan, a term of fondness for children, Dr. Johnson says; but it is perhaps from the Sax. paegenian, which bears the meaning of to speak fair, to wheedle.]

1. To court by frisking before one; as a dog.

The dog straight fauned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fauning greyhound. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To court by any means. Used by animals.

Instead thereof he kiss'd her weary feet,
And lick'd her lily hands with fauning tongue,
As he her wrong'd innocence did weat. Spenser, F. Q.

Is it not strange that a rational man should worship an ox?
that he should fawn upon his dog? bow himself before a cat?
and adore leeks and garlick? South.

3. To court servilely.

My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns;
What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

And thou, sly hypocrite, who now would'st be Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd Heav'n's awful monarch? Milton, P. L.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fauning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryden, En.

Dext'rous the craving fauning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to 'scape from flattery to wit. Pope.

FAWN.† n. s. A servile cringe; low flattery.

You will rather show our gentle lows
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them
For the inheritance of their loves. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thanks, Horace, for thy free and wholesome sharpness,
Which pleaseth Cæsar more than servile fawns. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

FA'WNER. † n. s. [from fawn.] One that fawns; one that pays servile courtship.

Our talking is trustless, our cares do abound;
Our fawners deem'd faithful, and friendship a foe.
By softness of behaviour we have arriv'd at the appellation of fawners.
Mir. for Mag. p. 85.
Spectator.

FA'WNING. † n. s. [from fawn.] Gross or low flattery; the act of servilely cringing.

Lower-crook'd cur'sies, and base spaniel fawning.
Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Clowis' fawnings are a horse's salutations.
B. Jonson, Staple of News.
The fawnings and the wiles of court.

He that hath—
Despised the fawnings of a future greatness.
Massinger, Renegado.

FA'WNINOLY. † adv. [from fawn.] In a cringing servile way.

He that so fawningly enticed the soul to sin, will now as bitterly upbraid it for having sinned.
South, Sermon ix. 28.

FA'XED. adj. [from pæx, Sax. hair.] Hairy. Now obsolete.

They could call a comet a fared star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.
Camden, Rem.

FAY. † n. s. [fee, Fr. See FAIRY.]

1. A fairy; an elf.

And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night-steeds,
Leaving their moon-lov'd maze.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

The bards' songs suppose, that after the battle of Camlan in Cornwall, where traitorous Mordred was slain, and Arthur wounded, Morgana le Fay, a great elfin lady, conveyed the body hither to cure it.
Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 3.

Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons hear!
Pope.
From her, [the Persian peri, Merjan,] we may fairly derive Ariosto's "la fata Morgana!"—from her likewise we may derive our Morgan le Faye, the patroness of Arthur in romances, and his conductress to the land of Faery.
Hole on the Arab. Nights' Entert. p. 15.

2. Faith. [Fr. fay, fay; Span. fe.] Wholly obsolete.

Their ill 'haviour garres men missay,
Both of their doctrine and their fay.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FE'ABERRY. n. s. [grossularia, Lat.] A gooseberry.
Dict.

TO FEAGUE. † v. a. [Gower uses To feige, for to censure; fagen, Germ. to sweep: fyken, Dutch, to strike:] To whip; to chastise; to beat.

When a knotty point comes, I lay my head close to it, with a snuff-box in my hand; and then I feague it away 't' faith.
Duke of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

FE'AL. † adj. [feal, Norm. French, "feal et leel," faithful and loyal, Kelham; later Fr. feal.] Faithful. Not now in use among the English; but still, I believe, among the Scotch.

The tenants by knights' service used to swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. faithful and loyal.
Chambers.

FE'ALTY. † n. s. [fealty, old Fr. of the eleventh century; fedeltà, Ital. fidelitas, Lat.] Duty due to a superiour lord; fidelity to a master; loyalty.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Let my affection
Command my eldest son, nay all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and thus
Against the high supremacy of Heaven.
Milton, P. L.

Each bird and beast behold
After their kind: I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
With low subjection.

Milton, P. L.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb Conjugal love.

Milton, P. L.

FEAR. † n. s. [Goth. faurhtan, to fear; faurthci, fear; Teut. vaer, fear; Norm. Fr. feer, fear; Swed. fara, danger; Icel. far, sorrowful.]

1. Dread; terroure; painful apprehension of danger.

Fear is an uneasiness of the mind, upon the thought of future evil likely to befall us.
Locke.

Trembling fear still to and fro did fly,
And found no place where safe she shrowd him might.
Spenser, F. Q.

For fear was upon them, because of the people of those countries.
Ezra, iii. 3.

Behold me in my sex; I am no soldier;
Tender, and full of fears, our blushing sex is,
Unhardened with relentless thoughts.

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta.

What then remains? Are we depriv'd of will?
Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill?
Dryden, Juv.
Fear, in general, is that passion of our nature whereby we are excited to provide for our security upon the approach of evil.
Rogers.

2. Awe; dejection of mind at the presence of any person or thing; terroure impressed: with of before that which impresseth.

And the fear of you, and the dread of you shall be upon every beast.
Gen. ix. 2.

3. Anxiety; solicitude.
The principal fear was for the holy temple.
2 Mac. xiv. 18.

4. That which causes fear.
Still, as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
As if his fear still follow'd him behind.
Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 21.
I will mock when your fear cometh, when your fear cometh as desolation.
Prov. i. 26.

Antony, stay not by his sides:
Thy demon, that's the spirit that keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not; but near him, thy angel
Becomes a fear, as being overpowered.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

5. The object of fear.
Except the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with me.
Gen. xxxi. 42.

6. Something hung up to scare deer by its colour or noise.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare.
Is. xxiv. 18.

FEAR. † n. s. [poepa, Saxon.] A companion. Obsolete. The true word is ferre. But Spenser occasionally writes it with the a. See FERE.

TO FEAR. † v. a. [See the etymology of the noun.]

1. To dread; to consider with apprehensions of terroure; to be afraid of.

Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
—Then never trust me if I be afraid.
—You are very sensible, yet you miss my sense;
I mean Hortensio is afraid of you.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

To fear the foe, since death opposeth strength,
Gives in your weakness, strength unto your foe.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

There shall rise up a kingdom, and it shall be feared above all the kingdoms before it.
2 Esdr. xii. 13.

When I view the beauties of thy face,
I fear not death, nor dangers, nor disgrace.
Dryden.

2. To fright; to terrify; to make afraid. [Ort. Vocab. 1514, terrifico.]

Let not worldly shame fear us to wepe for our synnes.

Some, sitting on the hatches, would seein there,

With hideous gazing, to fear away fear.

Donne.

3. To reverence.

There is forgiveness with thee, that Thou mayest be fear'd.

Psalms cxxx. 4.

TO FEAR. v. n.

1. To live in terror; to be afraid.

Well you may fear too far, sir. —

— Safer than trust too far:

Let me still take away the harms I fear,

Not fear still to be taken.

Shakespeare, K. L.

If any such be here, if any fear

Less for his person than an ill report;

If any think brave death outweighs bad life. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To be anxious.

Then let the greedy merchant fear

For his ill-gotten gain;

And pray to gods that will not hear,

While the debating winds and billows bear

His wealth into the main.

Dryden, Horace.

See, pious king, with diff'rent strife,

Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn:

So much she fears for William's life,

That Mary's fate she dare not mourn.

Prior.

FEARFUL. adj. [from fear and full.]

1. Timorous; timid; easily made afraid.

Them that are of a fearful heart.

Isaiah, xxxv. 4.

2. Afraid. It has of before the object of fear.

execution of extraordinary judgement upon them. Hooker.

What God did command touching Canaan, concerneth not us any otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure. Hooker.

All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement

Inhabits here: some heavenly power guide us

Out of this fearful country. Shakespeare, Tempest.

It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Heb. x. 31.

Lay down by these pleasures the fearful and dangerous thunders and lightnings, the horrible and frequent earthquakes, and then there will be found no comparison. Raleigh.

This is the natural fruit of sin, and the present revenge which it takes upon sinners, besides that fearful punishment which shall be inflicted on them in another life. Tillotson.

FEARFULLY. adv. [from fearful.]

1. Timorously; in fear.

In such a night

Did this fearfully o'ertrip the dew,

And saw the lion's shadow.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Terribly; dreadfully.

Psalms cxxxix. 14.

FEARFULNESS. n. s. [from fearful.]

1. Timorousness; habitual timidity.

O Egeus, the fruit of thy womb,
Of riot thou the right reward dost reap;
But if thou wilt avoid this wretchedness,
Be wise, and look about before you leap.

Mir. for Mag. p. 240.

The Jews themselves thought nothing fit to be a murderer of this kind but a devil, and a she-one too; that the fearfulness of the sex might dispose to more unruly and more barbarous resolutions of inhumanity. Gregory, Posthuma, p. 97.

2. State of being afraid; awe; dread.

Is it credible that the acknowledgement of our own unworthiness, our professed fearfulness to ask any thing, otherwise than only for his sake to whom God can deny nothing, that this should be noted for a popish error? Hooker.

A third thing that makes a government justly despised, is fearfulness of and mean compliances with bold popular offenders.

South.

FEARLESS. adj. [from fear.] Free from fear; intrepid; courageous; bold; with of before the subject.

From the ground she fearless doth arise,

And walketh forth without suspect of crime. Spenser, F. Q.

The flaming seraph, fearless, though alone

Encompass'd round with foes, thus answer'd bold. Milton, P. L.

A nation, whose distinguishing character it is to be more fearless of death and danger than any other. Temple.

FEARLESSLY. adv. [from fearless.] Without terror; intrepidly.

'Tis matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the stupid, yet common boldness of men, who so fearlessly expose themselves to this most formidable of perils. Decay of Piety.

FEARLESSNESS. n. s. [from fearless.] Exemption from fear; intrepidity; courage; boldness.

He gave instances of an invincible courage, and fearlessness in danger. Clarendon.

FEASIBILITY. n. s. [from feasible.]

1. Practicability.

2. A thing practicable.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, possibilities for feasibilities, and things impossible for possibilities themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FEASIBLE. adj. [faisible, French. Vulg. Err. Our own word was formerly written faisible; and sometimes feacible, as by Barret; probably in conformity to the Lat. etymon, facio, to do.] Practicable; such as may be effected; such as may be done.

We conclude many things impossibilities, which yet are easy feasibles. Glavinille, Scopsis.

Things are feasible in themselves; else the eternal wisdom of God would never have advised, and much less have commanded them. South.

FEASIBLENESS. n. s. [from feasible.] Practicability.

Let us inquire into the feasibleness of this great improvement of our holy and christian diligence. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 271.

They have not yet convinced the world of the feasibleness and truth of their propositions, by any manifest transcriptions of them upon their lives. South, Sermon vii. 125.

You have convinced me of the feasibleness, as well as the excellency, of that kind of conversation.

Goodman, Wink. Ec. Conf. P. I.

FEASIBLY. adv. [from feasible.] Practicably.

FEAST. n. s. [feast, old French, of the tenth century; festle, modern; festum, Lat.]

1. An entertainment of the table; a sumptuous treat of great numbers.

Here's our chief guest. If he had been forgotten,

It had been as a gap in our great feast. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

On Pharaoh's birthday he made a feast unto all his servants. Gen. x. 20.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,

And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;

When lo! a bow'r ascended on the plain

With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryden.

Those feasters could speak of great and many excellencies in manna. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

2. One that entertains magnificently; a feast-maker; a banqueter. Huloet.

FEASTFUL. † adj. [feast and full.] This was a word in use at least a century before Milton wrote, from whose poetry Dr. Johnson cites his earliest example.]

1. Festive; joyful.

They constitute also a feastful day to the honour and worship thereof. Balc on the Revcl. P. III. (1550.) sign. II.
Our solemn feastful day.

Abp. Parker, Transl. of the Psalms, p. 234.

The virgins also shall on feastful days
Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
From whence captivity and loss of eyes.

Milton, S. A.

Therefore be sure

Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure. Milton, Sonnet.

2. Luxurious; riotous.

The suitor train

Who crowd his palace, and with lawless pow'r
His herds and flocks in feastful rites devour. Pope, Odyssey.

FEASTING.  n. s.* [from feast.] An entertainment; a treat.

But these very grievously afflicted them, whom they had received with feastings. Wisdom, xix. 16.

FEASTRITE. n. s. [feast and rite.] Custom observed in entertainments.

His hospitable gate,

Unbar'd to all, invites a numerous train
Of daily guests; whose board with plenty crown'd,
Revives the feastrites old. Philips.

FEAT. † n. s. [feat, Norm. French, done, deed, Kelham; fait, modern; factum, Lat.]

1. Act; deed; action; exploit.

Pyrocles is his name, renowned far
For his bold feats, and hardy confidence;
Full oft approved in many a cruel war. Spenser, F. Q.

Tarquín's self he met,

And struck him on his knee; in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd th' best man i' th' field. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Our soldiers are men of strong heads for action, and perform much feats as they are not able to express. Addison, Spect.

2. A trick; an artful, festive, or ludicrous performance.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity and motion in youth than afterwards. Bacon, Essays.

FEAT. † adj. [fait, bien fait, French; "homo factus ad unguem," Lat. So far Dr. Johnson. But the Su. Goth. fait, apt, ready, may be also considered as the parent of the word before us.]

1. Ready; skillful; ingenious.

Never master had

A page so kind, so duteous, diligent;

So tender over his occasions, true,

So feat, so nurse-like.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. Nice; neat.

Look how well my garments sit upon me,

Much feater than before.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

She speaks feat English.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

The tender stalks on high.

Spenser, Prothalam.

FEATHER. n. s. [feðer, Saxon; feder, German.]

1. The plume of birds.

Look as I blow this feather from my face.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The brave eagle does with sorrow see

The forest wasted, and that lofty tree,

Which holds her nest, about to be o'erthrown,

Before the feathers of her young are grown;

She will not leave them, nor she cannot stay,

But bears them boldly on her wings away.

Waller.

When a man in the dark presses either corner of his eye with his finger, and turns his eye away from his finger, he will see a circle of colours like those in the feathers of a peacock's tail.

Newton, Opticks.

I am bright as an angel, and light as a feather.

Swift.

2. Kind; nature; species: from the proverbial expression, birds of a feather; that is, of a species.

Clifford and the haught Northumberland,

And of their feather many more proud birds,

Have wrought the easy-melting king, like wax.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I am not of that feather to shake off

My friend, when he most needs me.

Shakespeare, Timon.

3. An ornament; an empty title.

4. [Upon a horse.] A sort of natural frizzling of hair, which, in some places, rises above the lying hair, and there makes a figure resembling the tip of an ear of corn.

Farrier's Dict.

To FEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in feathers.

2. To fit with feathers.

3. To tread as a cock.

Dame Partlet was the sovereign of his heart;

Ardent in love, outrageous in his play,

He feather'd her a hundred times a-day.

Dryden.

4. To enrich; to adorn; to exalt.

They stuck not to say, that the king cared not to plume his nobility and people, to feather himself.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

5. To FEATHER one's Nest. [Alluding to birds which collect feathers, among other materials, for making their nests.] To get riches together.

FEATHERBED. n. s. [feather and bed.] A bed stuffed with feathers; a soft bed.

FEATHERDIVER. n. s. [feather and dive.] One who cleanses feathers by whisking them about.

A featherdive had the residue of his lungs filled with the fine dust or down of feathers. Derham, Physico-Theol.

FEATHERED. † adj. [from feather.]

1. Clothed with feathers.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shakespeare, Hep. IV.

So when the new-born phoenix first is seen,
Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen. Dryden.

Dark'ning the sky, they hover o'er and shroud
The wanton sailors with a feather'd cloud. Prior.

Then ships of uncouth form shall stem the tide,
And feather'd people crowd my wealthy side. Pope.

Vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and, among many other feathered creatures, several little winged boys perch upon the middle arches. Addison, Spect.

2. Fitted with feathers; carrying feathers.

An eagle had the ill hap to be struck with an arrow, fea-ther'd from her own wing. L'Estrange.

Not the bow they bend, nor boast the skill
To give the feather'd arrow wings to kill. Pope, Odyssey.

3. Swift; winged, like an arrow.

Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours. Sandys, Job, p. 12.

Nor think this while our feathered minutes may Fall under measure; Time itself can stay. Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 43.

4. Smoothed, like down or feathers.

As if it were a sign of godliness, and a mark of God's favourites, to be affected with nonsense, feathered with soft and delicate phrases, and pointed with pathetick accents! Scott, Works, ii. 124.

FEATHEREDGE. n. s.

Boards or planks that have one edge thinner than another, are called featheredge stuff. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

ing to a feather edge.

The cover must be made of featheredged boards, in the nature of several doors with hinges fixed thereon. Mortimer.

FEATHERFEW. n. s. A plant both single and double:
it is increased by seeds or slips, and also by dividing the roots: it flowereth most part of the summer. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FEATHER-GRASS. n. s. [gramen plumosum.] An herb.

FEATHERLESS. † adj. [Sax. fr̥œplear.] Having few or no feathers. Huloet.

This so high grown ivy was like that featherless bird, which went about to beg plumes of other birds to cover his nakedness. Howell, Voc. Forest.

FEATHERLY. adj. [from feather.] Resembling feather.

The accretion or pluvius aggelation of hail about the mother and fundamental atoms thereof, seems to be some featherly particle of snow, although snow itself be sexangular. Brown.

FEATHERSELLER. n. s. [feather and seller.] One who sells feathers for beds.

FEATHERY. † adj. [from feather.]

1. Clothed with feathers.

Or whistle from the lodge, or village-cock
Count the night-watches to his featherly James. Milton, Comus.

2. Light as a feather.

Transitory migrations seem light and featherly.
Donne, Lett. to Sir H. G. Poems, p. 283.

FEA

Feathery and light stuff, that hath no good substance in it.
Whalley, Redempt. of Time, (1634.) p. 25.

FEATLY. † adv. [from feat.] Neatly; nimbly; dexterously.

Foot it featly here and there,
And sweet sprites the burden bear. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light

He saw a quire of ladies in a round,

That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

We are bluntly told — not neatly and featly.

Richard, Observ. (1696.) p. 64.

FEATNESS. † n. s. [from feat.] Neatness; nicety; dexterity. Huloet, and Sherwood.

FE'ATOUS.* adj. See FEATEOUS.

FE'ATOUSLY.* adv. See FEATEOUSLY. Nimbly; neatly. This is the word in Chaucer, not feateously.

The morrice rings, while hobby horse doth foot it feateously.
Beun. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pastle.

FE'ATURE. † n. s. [feiture, old French.]

1. The cast or make of the face.

Report the feature of Octavia, her years. Shakespeare.

2. Any lincament or single part of the face.

Though ye be the fairest of God's creatures,

Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features. Spenser.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history.

Addison on Medals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face. Addison, Ovid.

3. The whole turn of the body; the fashion; the make.

She also doff'd her heavy habergeon
Which the fair feature of her limbs did hide. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Workmanship.

Here they [the witches] speak as if they were creating some new feature, which the devil persuades them to be able to do often, by the pronouncing of words, and pouring out of liquors on the earth.

B. Jonson, his own Notes on his Mosques.

To FE'ATURE. † v. a. To resemble in countenance;
to favour. Dr. Johnson cites, as an illustration of this word, the passage which I have given to the verb feat; the true word being feated; and featured an unwarrantable alteration.

FE'ATURED.* adj. [from feature.]

1. Having handsome features.

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Rich thou art, featured thou art.

Greene, Farewell to Folly, (1617.)

2. Having a good or bad form, shape, or features.

Richard the third — ill featured of limbs.

Sir T. More, Descript. of K. Rich. III.

Horses better featured, or more serviceable than now.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 36.

3. Resembling in feature or countenance.

Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,

Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd. Shakespeare, Sonnet.

What are the noblest ornaments, but deaths

Turn'd flatterers of life in paint, or marble,

The well-stain'd canvas, or the featur'd stone! Young, Night Th. 9.

To FEAZE. v. a. [faissez, French.]

1. To untwist the end of a rope, and reduce it again to its first stamina.

2. To beat; to whip with rods. Armsworth.

2. Lees; feces; sediment; drags.

Pour upon it some very strong lee, to facilitate the separation of its feculencies. Boyle.

Whether the wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence, which in more porous stocks
Of cyder plants finds passage free. Philips.

FÆCULENT adj. [feculentus, Lat. feculent, French.] Foul; dreggy; excrementitious.

But both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly,
Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent. Spenser, F. Q.

They are to the body as the light of a candle to the gross and feculent snuff, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its impurity. Glanville, Apology.

FÆCUND adj. [fecundus, Latin; second, French.] Fruitful; prolifick.

The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be. Granat, Bills of Mortality.

FÆCUNDITY n. s. [from fecund; secondité, French.] 1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years, and I have found that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren nor being exhausted. Bentley.

FÆD Preterite and participle pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fæd on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FÆDARY n. s. [fedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakspeare, may signify either a confederate, a partner, or a dependant.

Damn'd paper!

Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!

Art thou a fedary for this act, and look'st

So virgin-like without. Shakspeare, Cymb.

FÆDERAL adj. [from fedus, Latin.] Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and Heathens, was wont to be. Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Grew.

FÆDERARY n. s. [from fedus, Latin.] A confederate; an accomplice.

She's a traitor, and Camillo is

A fedary with her. Shakspeare.

FÆDERATE adj. [federatus, Latin.] Leagued; joined in confederacy.

FÆDERATIVE * adj. [from federate.] Having power to make a league or contract.

[They] suggest to them leagues of perpetual amity, at the very time when the power, to which our constitution has exclusively delegated the federative capacity of this kingdom, may find it expedient to make war upon them. Burke on the French Revolution.

FÆDERATION * n. s. [from federate.] A league.

Is he obliged to keep any terms with these clubs and federations, who hold out to us as a pattern for imitation, the proceedings in France? Burke.

FÆDITY * n. s. [Lat. feditus.] Baseness; turpitude; inherent vileness.

A second [impediment] may be the fedity and unnaturalness of the match, when the parties incestuously marry. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 10.

Some fedities common amongst the Gnosticks, not fit to be named. Bp. Lavington, Moravians compared, &c. p. 65.

FEE † n. s. [peoh, Sax. fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish. So far Dr. Johnson. The Saxon word denotes, like the Goth. faihus, goods, possessions of any kind. So the Icel. and the Su. Goth. fae. See also FOOD. Some think that because those, who held in fee, obtained the appellation of fideles, the word may be derived from the Lat. fides, faith; Fr. fe, fed, foi; low Lat. fedum, feudum. See Brady's Gloss. Old Eng. Hist. p. 45. and Boehmeri Principia Juris Feudalis, p. 11.

Others, that foedus, an agreement, is the etymon. But the northern language gives the origin: "Vas auk habanda faike manas," i. e. "for he had great possessions." Hence also food, and the goods given, were for the sustenance of the vassal. Feudum is not to be found in writings before the eleventh century. See FEUDAL.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgement of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England; the crown land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, 'To us and our heirs for ever': fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?
The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. Reward; gratification; recompence.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakespeare.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison, Spect.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.

- FE'E-FARM. n. s. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superior lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again to hold in fee-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possess'd with fear. Davies.

- To FEE. † v. a. [Su. Goth. fae, reward.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The droupy rages and extends the skin,

In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise. Dryden, Pers.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shakespeare, M. W. of Winds.

She hath an usher, and a waiting gentlewoman,
A page, a coachman; these are fee'd and fee'd,
And yet for all that will be prating.

Beaum. and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.
The unfamiliar cognizance of a fee'd gamester.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

3. To keep in hire. Dr. Jamieson seems to find fault with Dr. Johnson for thus rendering the word as used by Shakespeare; and says, that it properly denotes the act of hiring.

There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant fee'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- FE'BLE. † adj. [old French, feble and fieble; modern foible; Lat. debilis.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the febble upon asses to Jericho,
Chron. xxviii. 15.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But febble are the succours I can send. Dryden, Æn.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;
My spirits febble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and febble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the febble, but retards the strong. Smith.

- To FE'BLE. † v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not now perhaps in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious slight

Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite. Spenser, F. Q.
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement. Shakespeare, K. John.

A life feebled with natural infirmities.

Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615,) sign. A. 5. b.
Many a burning sun

Has sear'd my body and boil'd up my blood,
Feebled my knees, and stamp'd a meagerness
Upon my figure. Beaum. and Fl. 1st Prin.

- FE'BLEMINDED. adj. [febble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess. v. 14.

- FE'BLENESS. † n. s. [from febble; old French, febles; and so Spenser once uses feblesse for the present word, F. Q. iv. viii. 37. Chaucer has feblesse.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

F E E

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness. Til. Andronicus.
Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.

To FEED. † v. a. [fodan, Gothick; foda, Sw. peban, foeban, Sax. fodr. Icel. foðr. See also FEE.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue. Dryden.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed
the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.
The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of sharleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.
The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter. Mortimer.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love? Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knolles.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.

To FEED. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals' food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sawce to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.
He feeds on fruits which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden, Virg.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope, Essay on Man.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Ex. xxii. 5.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shuddering kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.

An old worked on fats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer.

2. Pasture.

Besides his vote, his stocks and bonds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakspeare, As you like it.

3. Meal; not of eating.

Plenty hangs
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not: for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milton, P. L.

F E E

FE'EDER. † n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.

Abel was a keeper [in the margin, a feeder] of sheep. Genesis, iv. 2.

Swinish gluttony

Ne'er looks to heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, Comus.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
It [flattery] is the poisoning of men's understanding, the feeder of humours. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. p. 376.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Shakspeare.

But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the missel-thrush, or feeder upon misseltoe. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. One that eats in a certain mode: as, a nice feeder, a gross feeder.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality:
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory. Dryden, Juu.

FE'EDING. † n. s. [Sax. feodung.] Pasture. See FEED.

Finding the feeding, for which he had toil'd
To have kept safe, by these vile cattle spoil'd.
Drayton's Poems, Moon-shaft.

To FEEL. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. v. n. [pelan,
Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours.
Addison, Spect.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts, xvi. 27.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth.
Dryden.

Of these tumours one feels flaccid and rimples; the other more even, flatulent and springy. Sharp, Surgery.

To FEEL. v. a.

1. To perceive by the touch.

Suffer me that I may feel the pillars. Judges, xvi. 26.

2. To try; to sound.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour.
Shakspeare.

3. To have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel. Milton, P. L.
But why should those be thought to 'scape, who feel
Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel? Creech.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The well-sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost:
He best can paint them who can feel them most. Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair. Pope.

F E E

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FEEL. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel.

Sharp, Surgery.

FEELER. † n. s. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would force the feeler's soul.
To the oath of loyalty.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. One that perceives mentally.

Of my longing to see you I am a better feeler than a describer.

Sir H. Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 399.

3. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted.

Durham, Physico-Theol.

FEELING. part. adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion.
Write till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again: and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity.

Sidney.

Sidney.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last
Strikes through my heart.

Southerne.

FEELING. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore?

Milton, P. L.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.

Bacon, Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness which may be called a sort of internal feeling.

Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly.

Sidney.

He would not have talk'd so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it.

Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy pang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,

F E E

This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil.

Raleigh, Hist.

FEET. † n. s. The plural of foot. [Sax. fet.]

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears.

Pope, Statius.

FEETLESS. † adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouloin broched three feetless birds, called Al-lerions, upon his arrow.

C Camden.

There behold the mangled, headless, handless, feetless corpses of their fellow-countrymen.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 196.

To FEIGN. † v. a. [feigner, old French, of the eleventh century; feindre, modern; fingo, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire!
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

Milton, P. L.

Neh. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.

Spenser, F. Q.

To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.

Shakespeare.

FEIGNEDLY. † adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Those that come feignedly, and those that come unfeignedly.

Abp. Cramer on the Sacram. fol. 99.

Her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

Jerem. iii. 10.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens.

Bacon.

FEIGNEDNESS.  n. s.* [from feigned.] Fiction; deceit.

The church is not the school of feignedness and hypocrisy, but of truth and sincerity.

Harnar, Transl. of Beza's Serin. p. 39.

FEIGNER. n. s. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; as the thing done, the doing, and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning, and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FEIGNING.  n. s.* [from feign.] A false appearance; an artful contrivance.

Hulot.

May her feignings

Not take your wisdoms; but this day she baited
A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes.

B. Jonson, For

FEIGNINGLY.  adv.* [from feigning.] Craftily.

Hulot, and Sherwood

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be dressed up into any feint appearance of it.

Lock

FEINT. n. s. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance, or offer of something not intended to be.

Country's letter is but a feint to get off.

Spectator.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars.

Prior.

FELANDERS. † n. s. [filandres, Fr. Cotgrave, "the small worms that breed in bruised, surfeited, or foul-fed hawks;" perhaps from filandre, full of small threads or fibres; filum, Lat. a thread. Dr. Johnson merely cites Ainsworth as his authority for this word, without any etymology or example; but it appears that our word is not felander, but filander.] Worms in hawks.

This may probably destroy that obstinate disease of the felander or hack-worm.

Sir T. Brown, of Hawks, Miscell. p. 115.

TO FELICITATE. † v. a. [feliciter, French, to make happy or prosperous, and to compliment, Cotgrave; felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy. See FELICITATE.

Gifts — felicitate lovers.

Transl. of Loredano's Academ. Disc. (1664.) p. 76.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey!

Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow.

Brown.

FELICITATE. * part. adj. [Lat. felicatus.] Made happy.

I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys;

And find I am alone felicitate

In your dear highness' love.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FELICITATION. n. s. [from felicitate.] Congratulation.

Dict.

FELICITOUS. † adj. [from felicito, Latin.]

Happy; prosperous.

In all which (war) she was felicitous and victorious.

Sir R. Naunton, Fragm. Reg. of Q. Eliz.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily.

Dict.

FELICITY. n. s. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, French.]

Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,

And grant that we, for whom thou didest die,

Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,

May live for ever in felicity.

Spenser, Sonnets.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;

But virtue join'd with riches and long life,

In corporal pleasure, he, and careless ease.

Milton, P. R.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete.

Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel!

Rogers.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper.

Grew, Museum.

FELL. † adj. [pell, Saxon; fel, old French, cruel, tyrannical, fierce.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,

Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same.

Fairfax.

So *fell*est foes

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep.

To take the one the other, by some chance.

Some trick not worth an egg, that grow dear friends.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,

And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,

E'er since pursue me.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,

More fell than tigers on the Libyan plain.

Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,

The keen hyena, feldest of the fell.

Thomson, Spring.

FELLI.* n. s. [Sax. pelle, gall, anger, melancholiness. Somner.]

Sweete Love, that doth his golden wings embay

In blessed nectar and pure Pleasure's well,

Untrobbled of vile feare or bitter fell.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 2.

FELL. † n. s. [pell, Saxon; fills, Goth. cellas; Gr.

cortex, Celt. pil, Lat. pellis.] The skin; the hide.

Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakspeare.

We still use it, however, in the word fellmonger, which means a dealer in hides.

And fell, in the present sense, was once common.

It is in the vocabulary of Ballokar.

Wipe thine eye;

The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,

Ere they shall make us weep.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd

To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair

Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir.

Shakespeare, Macb.

He ought to shear not to slay his sheep; to take their fleeces, not their fells.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FELL.* n. s. [German, fels, a rock; Icel. fel, acclivitas; the fell-foot, or foot of the hill;

pellas. Vide apud scholiasten in Aristoph. in Nubibus, A. 1. S. 1. quæ transcripta ferè Snidas in voce ΦΕΛΛΑ.

Ray. Mr. Whalley in his notes on Ben Jonson, who uses this word, refers, in explanation of it, to an interpretation of ΦΕΛΛΟΣ by Hezychius, viz. οκλινος; τοπος; και δυσεργος; and adds, that we seem to have taken this sense from our Gothick ancestors. The Su. Goth. faell, is a ridge or chain of mountains; and the Icel. fel, or fell, "a small mountain resting on one larger and longer," Gl. Rymbegla, as cited by Dr. Jamieson.

In the north of England the word is to this day common for a rocky hill.]

1. A hill; a mountain.

So may the first of all our fells be thine,

And both the bestriding of our goats and kine,

As thou our folds dost still secure.

B. Jonson, Masques.

This county abounds with mountains, which in the language of the country are called fells.

Burn and Nicolson, Hist. of Westmoreland, &c. i. 3

Greystock town and castle lie about three miles from Ulswater over the fells.

Gray's Letters.

2. A corruption of field, [Sax. peld,] meaning an open country, formerly used by way of antithesis to frith, a forest. Obsolete.

The Sylvans that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,

Both in the tufty frith, and in the mossy fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. B. 17.

TO FELL. † v. a. [fallen, German; apfyllan, Sax. to overthrow.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or Fell thee down.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Up and down he traverses his ground;

Now wards a falling blow, now strikes again.

Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and *fell*d him.

Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was *fell*d.

Howell, Paraphrase.

- On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milton, S. A.
2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.
Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
3. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would sell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
They stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees. 2 Kings, iii. 25.
Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their sauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.
- FELL. The preterite of To fall.
None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton, P. L.
- FELLER. n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.
Is. xiv. 8.
- FELLIFLUOUS. adj. [fel and fluo, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Dict.
- FELLMONGER. n. s. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.
- FELLINESS. n. s. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness;
fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood rail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very feltness loud he gan to weep. Spenser, F. Q.
Death, disarm'd,
Loses her feltness quite: All thanks to Him,
Who scourg'd the venom out. R. Blair, The Grave.
- FELLOE. n. s. [sometimes written felly; Sax.
felga; Dutch, felge, or velge.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fully or felly.
Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellys from her wheel,
And bowl the round have down the hill of heav'n. Shakspeare.
Their axle-trees, navgs, felloes, and spokes were all molten.
1 Kings, vii. 33.
- FELLON. n. s. A sore. See the second sense of FEDON.
- FELLOW. n. s. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound. Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish. So far Dr. Johnson. Minshew is right.
The word is from the Goth. felag, community, fellowship, which Serenius derives from the verb foelga, to follow. The Sax. pelap, a companion, must not be omitted, which Chaucer exactly follows in writing our word fellow.]
1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham, Schoolmaster.
To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.
2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls. Dryden, Virg.
3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;

And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L' Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.
So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants.
Sidney.
- Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here; the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.
5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodged in a body; that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison, Spect.
6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.
My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.
This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
— The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakspeare.
An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.
Bacon, Apophthegms.
- Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.
8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.
Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.
Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shakspeare.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shakspeare, K. John.
The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow! Shakspeare.
The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L' Estrange.
As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed. Dryden.
You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr.
Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.
9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.
10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.
There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

FELLOW-CITIZEN. * n. s. One who belongs to the same city.

Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints. Ephes. ii. 19.

FELLOW-COMMONER. † n. s.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot enclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge, and eighty pounds per annum for a fellow-commoner, was looked on as a sufficient maintenance.

Dean Prideaux to Ld. Townshend, (1715,) Life, &c. p. 196.

FELLOW-COUNSELLOR. * n. s. A member of the same council of state.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow-counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellowcreatures, the brutes in this lower world. Watts, Logick, Introd.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellowheirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 3 John, 8.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

My fellowlabourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

FELLOW-MAIDEN. * n. s. A virgin that bears another virgin company.

She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow-maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side. Shakespeare, Pericles.

FELLOW-MEMBER. * n. s. Member of the same body or society.

We signify our being united, and knit not only to Christ our head, but also to each other, as fellow-members.

Whole Duty of Man.

FELLOW-MINISTER. * n. s. One who serves the same office.

You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate — my fellow-ministers
Are alike invulnerable. Shakespeare, Tempest.

FELLOW-PEER. * n. s. One who enjoys the same privileges of nobility; as the peers of England do, whose titles are indeed different, but whose essential privileges are the same.

You shall not need, my fellow-peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure. Shakespeare, Pericles.

FELLOW-PRISONER. * n. s. One confined in the same prison, or for the same cause.

Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners. Rom. xvi. 7.

Before St. Paul went to Rome, he was "in prisons oft;" — and so well might have many fellow-prisoners.

Whitby on Rom. xvi. 7.

FELLOW-SCHOLAR. * n. s. One who studies in company with others.

You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellowservant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton, P. L.

Fair fellowservant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellowservants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellowsoldier, make thou proclamation. Shakespeare.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellowsoldier. Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I prythee, do not mock me, fellowstudent.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

If you have no fellowstudent at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts, Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellowsubjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. * n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow sufferers. Addison, Spect.

FELLOW-TRAVELLER. * n. s. One who travels in company with others.

That want of sepulture was a grievous punishment, Homer in his Odyssey speaking of Ulysses, and Elpenor his fellow-traveller being dead, gives us this authority.

Sir T. Herbert, Tran. p. 118.

Euripides, that friend of Socrates, and fellow-traveller of Plato. Morc, Conject. Cabb. p. 168.

FELLOW-WORKER. * n. s. One employed in the same design.

These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. Coloss. iv. 11.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. s. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOWFEELING. n. s. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest; commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milk-woman and your nursery-maid have a fellowfeeling. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

FEL

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.] Like a com-FELLOWLY. } panion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind and respectful carriage. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FELLOWSHIP. n. s. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy, Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Milton, P. R.
O love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shakespeare, Othello.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon, Ess.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Corusodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss.
Cocker's Arithmetick.

FELLY.† adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly;
savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser, Sonnets.

The hearts do ne'er agree,
But felly one another do upbraid. More, Song of the Soul.
Or like a lamp arm'd with pellucid horn,
Which rusling winds about do rudely toss,
And felly lash with injury and scorn. More, Song of the Soul.

FELLY.* n. s. See FELLOE.

FEL

FELNESS.* See FELLINESS.

FELLO-DE-SE.† n. s. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

* Making their natures a kind of felo de se to prompt the destroying itself. Lively Oracles, &c. p. 90.

FELON. n. s. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel,
Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
The wily fox,

Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman, Surgery.

FELON.† adj. [Fr. felon, fierce, cruel.] Cruel;
traitorous; inhuman; fierce.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so mischievous despoight! Spenser.
He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain.
Milton, Lycidas.

Then bids prepar'd th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope, Odyney.
Nought but the felon undermining hand
Of dark corruption can its frame dissolve.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.
O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY.† adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

Parents have been most feloniously robbed of their children.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.
Do the Chaldeans and Sabaeans feloniously drive away the herds of Job? Seasonable Sermon, p. 26.

FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious;
Not used.

[I] am like for desperate dōle to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

FELONY. n. s. [felonie, Fr. felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

I will make it felony to drink small beer.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome.

Addison, Travels.

FEMALE. n. s. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.]

A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them.

Gen. i. 27.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female, he shall offer it without blemish.

Leviticus, iii. 1.

Men, more divine,

Iud'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords.

Shakspeare.

FEMALE, adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems.

Milton, S. A.

Swarming next appear'd

The female bee, that feeds her husband drone.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns perhaps

With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,

Communicating male and female light,

Which two great sexes animate the world.

Milton, P. L.

Add what wants

In female sex, the more to draw his love.

Milton, P. L.

He scrupled not to cat

Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,

But fondly overcome with female charm.

Milton, P. L.

If by a female hand he had forseen

He was to die, his wish had rather been

The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;

We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.

Dryden, Pref. to Annus Mirab.

FEME Covert. † n. s. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron.

Blount.

My poor wife enjoyed herself happily under the protection of my shadow; and, being a feme-covert, not an officer durst come near her.

L'Estrange, Transl. of Quevedo.

FEME Sole. n. s. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINAILITY. n. s. [from fœmina, Latin.] Female and subjected to ease and delicacy.

Raleigh, Hist.

Feminine measures of impotent humour and indulgence.

Glanville, Serm. p. 382.

4. Belonging to women.

It will be worth our pains to take notice of some principal of the orders she [Paula] made in those feminine academies.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 27.

FE'MININE. n. s. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once

With men, as angels, without feminine.

Milton, P. L.

FEM'INITY.* n. s. [from fœmina, Lat.] Any quality or property of woman.

Hither great Venus brought this infant fair fostered to be,

And trained up in true feminitee.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 51.

There being all these symptoms of femininity in the church of Rome.

More on the Soc. Churches, ch. 6.

To FEMINIZE.* v. a. [from fœmina, Lat.] To make womanish.

the thigh.

The largest crooked peedle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.

Sharp, Surgery.

FEN. † n. s. [Sax. fenn; M. Goth. fani. Mr. H.

Tooke thinks that it is from the Sax. verb fynizean, to grow musty, to spoil, to corrupt. But the Go-thick fani is the word used for clay, or dirt, St.

John, ix. 6. (Vers. Goth.) and elsewhere. To this may be added the Su. Goth. fen, and the Teut.

ven.] A marsh; low, flat, and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen.

habiting marshes.

FEN-LAND.* n. s. [fenn-land, Sax. Chronic.]
Marshy land.

FENCE. † n. s. [from defence, Dr. Johnson says;
but defence is rather from fence, than fence from it.

Fence is from the unusual Latin word fendo, to drive away; whence offendo, and defendo.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents' view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar, And lay it in his sight, that it may stand A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison, Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command Divide the waters from the land, If dacing ships, and men prophane, Invade th' inviolable main; Th' eternal fences overleap, And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden, Horace.

Shall I mention make Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake? Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence, Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden. Employ their wiles and unavailing care, To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day; with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare, Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakspeare. Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric, That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence. Milton, Comus.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid; In fenced towers bestowed is their gain, Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job, xix. 8.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job, x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adder's wisdom I have learnt, To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton, S. A.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went, Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some gun, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throstle sing, he falls straight a capering: He will fence with his own shadow. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred; The stooping warriors aiming head to head, Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound; They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar, Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies' and gamblers' company. Locke.

FENCE-MONTH. n. s. A word of the forest-law; meaning the month in which it is prohibited, to hunt in any forest, as the does then fawn. It begins about the ninth of June, and continues till the ninth of July. There are also fence-months for fish. Bullockar, and Chambers.

FE'NCEFUL. adj. [fence and full.] Affording defence or protection.

Blue-ey'd Minerva — Taught artists first the carving tool to wield, Chariots with brass to arm, and form the fenceful shield. Congreve, Hymn to Venus.

FE'NCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

The wall Immovable of this now fenceless world. Milton, P. L. Each motion of the heart rises to fury, And love in their weak bosoms is a rage As terrible as hate, and as destructive: So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean, And heaves the billows of the boiling deep, Alike from North, from South. Rowe, Jane Shore.

FE'NCER. n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire, Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets; As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FE'NCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence.

Dr. Johnson mentions Addison as using the word, but has overlooked Spenser, probably in consequence of the corrupted text of some editions which substitute sensible for the genuine word fensible or fencible.

No fort so fensible, no walls so strong, But that continual battery will rive. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 10.

FE'NCIBLES. n. s. In the military history of our own times, such regiments as have been raised either expressly for the defence of our own country, or for a limited service; and for a given time.

FE'NCING. n. s. [from fence.] The art of fencing.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing. Arbutnot and Pope.

FE'NCINGMASTER. n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

The fencing-masters — present a foyle or fleuret to their scholars. Ld. Herbert's Life, p. 46.

FE'NCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencingschool, and every day exercising. Locke.

To FEND. v. a. [Lat. fendo, to drive away.]

1. To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold, With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryden, Virg.

2. In naval language, to fend a boat, is to defend it from being dashed against rocks, the shore, or the side of a ship.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

Such fending, and such proving. Braun, and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

F E O

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to send and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. s. [from send.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall, from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

To FENERATE.* v. n. [Lat. fœneror.] To put money to usury. Cockeram.

FENERATION. n. s. [fœneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfecundation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FENE'STRAL.* adj. [Lat. fenestralis; old French, fenestrelle, a little window, which Skelton adopts, mentioning "the fenestral of castel Angel gloriously glazed," Poems, p. 53. The adjective seems proper.] Belonging to windows.

Anthony Wood collected the sepulchral and fenestral inscriptions of the several parishes in the county of Oxford.

Bp. Nicholson, Eng. Hist. Library.

FENNEL.† n. s. [penol, Saxon; fenouil, old Fr. faniculum, Lat.] A plant of strong scent.

A savoury odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at even. Milton, P. L.

In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FENNYSTONES. n. s. A plant.

FENOWED.* adj. [from the Sax. fyngean, to become mouldy, to corrupt, to decay; as Mr. H. Tooke has observed, Div. of Purl. ii. 61. The word is in our old lexicography, though unnoticed or forgotten, in the form of fenewed. See Sherwood's Dict. 1632. where it is transferred to VINNOWED. And that is explained by Cotgrave mouldy, hoary, musty.] Mouldy. See VINNEWED.

The old moth-eaten leaden legend, and the foisty and fenowed festival, are yet secretly laid up in corners.

Dr. Favour, Antiq. Triumph. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 334.

FENSUCKED. adj. [fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd dogs, drawn by the powerful sun. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FENUGREEK.† n. s. [fenugrec, old Fr. fenogrecum, Sax. fenum Græcum, Lat.] A plant or herb, the seed of which is much used in medicine. Bullockar.

FÉOD. n. s. [feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure. Dict.

FÉODAL.† adj. [feodal, French, from feod.]

1. Held from another.

2. Belonging to a feod or tenure.

The feodal discipline extended itself every where, and influenced the conduct of the courts, and the manners of the people, with its own irregular martial spirit.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. iii. 1.

F E R

FÉODALITY.* n. s. [old Fr. feodalité.] The possession of, or seigniorship over, divers fiefs; feudal tenure; feudal law. Cotgrave.

The leaders teach the people to reject all feodality as the barbarism of tyranny. Burke.

FÉODARY.† n. s. [from feodum, Latin.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superiour lord. This word is cited by Dr. Johnson upon the authority of Sir T. Hanmer, who has thus defined feodary in his note on feodary in Shakspeare. See FEDARY. But the feudal vassal, as Mr. Malone observes, was not called a feodary, but a feodatary or feudatory. A feodary was an officer appointed by the court of wards to be present with, and assistant to, the escheators in every county at the finding of officers, and to give in evidence for the king. Stat. 32. Hen. viii. ch. 46. See also Bullockar's Expositor.

FÉODATARY.* n. s. [Lat. feudatarius.] A tenant who holds his estate by feudal service. See FÉUDATARY.

FÉODATORY.* adj. Holding from another by some conditional tenure.

Any beneficiary or feodatory king.

Bacon, Observ. on a Libel, 1592.

To FÉ'OFF.† v. a. [feoffer, old French; feffer, French; feoffare, low Latin.] To put in possession; to invest with right.

Cohcirs with thee of that blessed patrimony, so feoffed upon them, so possessed of them, that they can never be disseised.

Bp. Hall, Breath. of the Devout Soul, § 29.

If any man have a mind to feoffe a curse upon himself and his posterity, let him defile his fingers with the holy things of God.

Seasonable Serm. p. 49.

By spirit men cozen, when they father false doctrine upon the spirit; by word, when they feoff it upon true doctrine.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 231.

FÉOFF.* n. s. A fief. See FIEF.

By these sales the third part of the best feoffs in France came to be possessed by the clergy. Fuller, Holy War, p. 18.

FÉOFFE.† n. s. [féoffe, i. e. feudataire, old Fr. of the eleventh century; feoffatus, Lat.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffers in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the escheat of his lands. Spenser on Ireland.

FÉ'OFFER.† n. s. [old Fr. féoffgr; low Lat. feoffator.] One who gives possession of any thing. See FÉOFFMENT.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

FÉ'OFFMENT.† n. s. [féoffment, old French; feoffamentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immovable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor, gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowel.

Divers young gentlemen proffered large feoffments, but in vain. Parleton's News out of Purgatorie.

Patrons of both churches on account of their feoffment, and with the consent of Fulk Burmyngham, archdeacon of Oxford.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 18.

FE'RAL. † adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; deadly.
Dict.

Such feral accidents can want and penury produce.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 164.

The world is miserably tormented and shaken with wars; dearth, famine, inundations, plagues, and many feral diseases, reign among us.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 679.

By the wan moon-beam oft the bird of night
Lengthens her feral note.

Headley on the Ruins of Broomholm Priory.

FERE.* n. s. [Sax. fepa, gepa.] A companion; a mate; an equal. Formerly used either for husband or wife. In fere is also an old expression for together, in company; and sometimes written yfere. Gower uses bedfere, and B. Jonson the same, for bedfellow.

We shall ben yfere,

As Orpheus and Eurydice his fere.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress, iv. 791.

Charissa to a lovely fere

Was linked, and by him had many pledges dear.

Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 4.

FER'IAL.* adj. [ferialis, Lat.] Respecting the common days of the week; sometimes, holidays.

Concerning the ferial character: The ecclesiastical year, of old, began at Easter, the first week whereof was all holiday, the days being distinguished by prima, secunda, tertia, &c. added unto feria; from thence the days of any other week began to be called feria prima, secunda, &c.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 134.

[They] did learn to dance, and to sing, and to play on instruments on the ferial days.
Dugdale, Orig. Judic. ch. 55.

FERIA'TION. n. s. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physician's vacation.
Brown.

FE'RIE.* n. s. [ferie, old French; feria, Lat.] Any day of the week not kept holy. Bullokar. Yet Wicliffe uses feries for holidays. But a common day seems to have been the usual meaning of the word.

My feast is turned into simple ferie.

Dance of Machabree, fol. 221. b.

FE'RINE. † adj. [ferin, old Fr. ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untamable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves, bears.
Hale.

There are brutish and unnatural desires, which the philosopher calleth ferine and inhumane.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

FERI'NENESS. n. s. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness.

Hale.

FE'RITY. † n. s. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

All ferity and inhumanity being laid aside.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

The ferity of such minds bears no rule in retaliations.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

[They] live by the rules of ferity and lust, and differ from the beasts seemingly in little else but external shape.

Glanville, Serm. p. 285.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

FER

To FERE. See To FIRE.

FERM.* n. s. [Sax. fepum; old Fr. ferme.]

1. Rent; farm.

Ferm signified rent both in England and in France, says Madox, in his Firma Burgi: he might have added Scotland.
Chalmers, Sir D. Lindsay, Gloss.

2. Lodging-house. The Saxon word is used both for hospitality and an inn or lodging, like the Lat. hospitium; and Spenser's expression is literally the Latin ex hospitio discedere, to leave one's lodging.

His sinful soul with desperate disdain

Out of her fleshly ferme fled to the place of pain.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 23.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye yggrous swains! while youth ferments your blood,

And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,

Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

Pope.

To FERMENT. † v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

If wine or cider do ferment twice, it will be harder, than if it had fermented but once.
Neale's Cider in Evelyn's Pomona.

FE'RMENT. n. s. [ferment, French; fermentum, Lat.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours, which poison, are putrefying ferments.

Floyer on the Humours.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire.

Rogers, Serm.

FERME'NTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy serosities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach.
Brown.

FERMENTA'TION. n. s. [fermentatio, Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.
Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.

Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.

Collier of Friendship.

The sap, in fluent dance,

And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads

All this innumerable colour'd scene of things.

Thomson.

FERME'NTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatical spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.

Arbuthnot.

FERME'NTATIVENESS.* n. s. [from fermentative.] Capability of fermenting.

The white of the egg he concluded, from its fermentativeness, to be impregnated with air.

Dr. Tyson, Hist. R. S. (1684,) iv. 172.

FE'ROUR. n. s. [fervor, Lat. fervor, Fr.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray
Foretells the fervour of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threatned heat.

Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day;
So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
And blasting lightnings burst away.

Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things.
Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus.
Shakspeare, Cymb.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present fervour.
Addison on Italy.

FE'SCENNINE.* n. s. [from Fescennia, in Tuscany, where licentious and wanton verses were sung at weddings; Lat. Fescennini versus.] A licentious poem.

Many old poets — did write fescennines, atellans, and lascivious songs.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 414.

FE'SCENNINE.* adj. [Lat. fescenninus.] Licentious; wanton.

Such a race
We pray may grace
Your fruitful spreading vine,
But dare not ask our wish in language Fescennine.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

There seldom wanted a company of boys and mad sparks, got together, to sing a parcel of obscene verses, which were tolerated on this occasion, [the nuptial feast.] They consisted of a kind of Fescennine rhymes.
Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. 5.

FE'SCUE.† n. s. [Teut. vesken; Fr. festu.] Our own word was formerly written festu. It is still pronounced, in some places, vester. The original is probably the Latin festuca, a young shoot, or stalk of a tree; a small wand or stick; though Mr. Pegge strangely interprets it, by way of etymological explanation, verse-cue.] A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue.
Holder.

Teach them how manly passions ought to move;
For such as cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fescues to each shining part.
Dryden.

FE'BELS.† n. s. [fusiols, Fr. "fasels, long pease, kidney beans." Cotgrave.] A kind of base grain.

Disdain not fessels or poor vetch to sow,
Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive.
May, Virgil.

FESSE. n. s. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle; if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwise, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as, the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight.

FE'STAL.* adj. [old Fr. festal, from the Lat. festum.] Respecting feasts; befitting a feast.

They would have thought, who heard the strain,
They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids
Amidst the festal sounding shades
To some unwearied minstrel dancing.

Collins, Ode on the Passions.

These were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas celebrity.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 142.

At festal seasons, there may be supposed a very numerous company.
Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

To FE'STER.† v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius. Dr. Johnson accedes to this etymology. But our word may be perhaps a corruption of the Lat. pustula, a blain, a blister.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply festered within me.
Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And festering sore, did rankle yet within.
How should our festered sores be cured?
Spenser, F. Q. Hooker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.
— Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

Mind that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect.
Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester.
South.

FE'STINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FE'STINATELY. adv. [from festinate.] Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key; give enlargement to the swain; bring him festinately hither.
Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

FESTINATION.† n. s. [festinatio, Latin.] Haste; hurry.

Lay hands on him with all festination.
Preston, Trag. of K. Cambises, (1561.)

Festination may prove precipitation. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

FE'STIVAL.† adj. [festival, old Fr. festivus, Lat.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

The king forbid that they should profane the sabbaths and festival days.
1 Macc. i. 45.

Their garlands — were convivial, festival, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funebrial.
Sir T. Brown, Muscoll. p. 91.

He appeared at great tables, and festival entertainments, that he might manifest his divine charity to man.
Atterbury.

FESTIVAL. n. s. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival,
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them.
Th' invited sisters with their graces blest
Their festivals.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul. Sandys.

The morning trumpets festival proclum'd
Through each high street.
Millon, S. A.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
Come celebrate this festival,
And merrily sing and sport, and play;
'Tis Oriana's nuptial day.
Graville.

F E T

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival. Broome on the Odyssey.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgement to come. Atterbury, Sermons.

FESTIVE.† adj. [festive, old Fr. festivus, Latin.]

Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls
To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall. Thomson.

His vein was chiefly festive and satirical.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. 2.

FESTIV'ITY.† n. s. [festivité, old French; festivitas, Latin.]

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour. Broom.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep-shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast. South.

2. Gaiety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To some persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holiday.

Bp. Taylor.

FESTO'ON.† n. s. [feston, French; "corona ex floribus texta, seu sertum festum, aut festivum, i. e. festis dictus usurpari solitum." Skinner.] An ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, and suspended by the two extremes, whence it hangs down perpendicularly.

Harris.

The mere flower-painter is, we see, obliged to study the form of festons. Ld. Shaftesbury.

FESTUCINE. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Straw-colour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grass-hopper. Brown.

FESTUCOUS. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FET.† v. a. [See To FETCH and FAR-FET.]

1. To fetch; to go and bring. Not in use.

Get home with thy fewel, make ready to fet.

The sooner the easier carriage to get. Tusser, Husbandry.

But for he was unable them to fet,

A little boy did on him still attend. Spenser, F. Q.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoiaikim, who slew him with the sword. Jer. xxvi. 23.

2. To come to; to arrive at.

We hoise up mast and sail, that in a while

We fet the shore. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FET. n. s. [I suppose from fait, French, a part or portion.] A piece. Not in use.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a fet

Of seed-pearl, ere she bath'd her there

Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

To FETCH.† v. a. preter. fetch'd; anciently fet; unless it rather came from To fet. [neccan, pettan, Saxon; fatta, Swedish.]

1. To go and bring.

They have devis'd a mean

How he her chamber-window will ascend,

And with a corded ladder fetch her down. Shakspeare.

We will take men to fetch victuals for the people.

Judges, xx. 10.

Go to the flock and fetch me from thence two kid goats.

Gen. xxvii. 9.

The seat of empire, where the Irish come,
And the unwilling Scotch, to fetch their doom. Waller.

F E T

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. To derive; to draw.

On, you noblest English,

Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war-proof. Shakspeare.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off, for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets. Bacon, Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells, we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

At Rome, any of those arts immediately thrives under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetch'd up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderson.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties till the skill of the polisher fetch's out the colours. Addison, Spect.

7. To perform. It is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round

Over the mount. Milton, Arcades.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles, History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.

Shakspeare.

The fox fetch'd a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L' Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To perform without suddenness or violence.

She

As if she had drunk Lethæ, or had made

Even with Heaven, did fetch so still a sleep,
So sweet and sound. Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

10. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and streight we fetch'd

The Syrens' isle; a spleenless wind so stretch

Het wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel.

Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day

Travelling East; and with her part averse

From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part

Still luminous by his ray.

Milton, P. L.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he,

I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L' Estrange.

11. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

To FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,

It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakspeare.

FETCH.† n. s. [Sax. facen, fraud, trick, deceit.]

A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,

His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind;

His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;

His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tusser.

F E T

It is a fetok of wit;
You laying these slight sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politicks,
Streight cast about to over-reach
Th' unwearied conqueror with a fetch.
With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me.
Hudibras.
Stillingfleet.
L'Estrange.

The fox had a fetch in't.
From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks and watches,
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean
That Alna is a mere machine.
Prior.

FETCHER.† n. s. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.
Hulot.

FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetide, French.]
Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eructations.
Arbuthnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,
Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifed Cairo's filth and fetid fields.
Thomson, Summer.
FETIDNESS. n. s. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n. s. [feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pastern joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.
Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakespeare, Hen. V.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore.
Dryden, Virg.
FETOR. n. s. [factor, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour.
Brown.
When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acescent substances, and none better than whey.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

FETTER. n. s. It is commonly used in the plural, fetters. [from feet; fercepe, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand.
Ecclus. xxi. 19.
Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed.
Raleigh.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flieg him like enchanted ground.
Dryden.
The wretch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release.
Prior.
Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter.
Addison.
I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom.
A. Philips.

To FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness.
Sidney.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd;
More than my shanks and wrists.
Shakespeare, Cymb.
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words.
Shakespeare.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move.
Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

F E U

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd.
Prior.
FETTERLESS.* adj. [fetter and less.] Free from restraint.

Yet this affected strain gives me a tongue
As fetterless, as is an emperor's.
Marston, Malcontent.

To FETTL.† v. n. [A cant word from feet, Dr. Johnson says. This is a mistake. It is an old English word, as Mr. Malone also observes; and is not yet disused in the northern parts of England. "To fettle, to set or go about any thing; to dress, prepare, or put in order." Grose. It is probably from the Su. Goth. fykt, studium.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

Nor list he now go whistling to the car,
But sells his team, and fettleth to the war.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell.
Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

FETUS. n. s. [factus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb.
Boyle.

FEU.* n. s. [Sax. feoh.] A fee, or feudal tenure. See FEUDAL.

FEU DE JOIE.* [French.] A bonfire; a firing of guns on any joyful occasion.

The origin of this fire on Midsummer eve, which is still retained by so many nations, though enveloped in the mist of antiquity, is very simple: it was a feu de joie, kindled the very moment the year began; for the first of all years, and the most ancient that we know of, began at this month of June.
Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FEUD.† n. s. [Sax. feahð, enmity; from fean, to hate, or fah, a foe; Cimbr. faide; low Lat. faida.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their publick goods.
Hudibras.
In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain.
Addison.
Scythia mourns

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome.
Addison, Cato.

FEUD.* n. s. [old-Fr. feude; low Lat. feudum.] A conditional allotment of land. See FEOD.

The constitution of feuds had its original from the military policy of the northern nations.
Blackstone.

FEUDAL.† adj. [feudal, old Fr. feudalis, low Lat.] pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superior lord.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.
Hale.

A feudal kingdom was properly the encampment of a great army; military ideas predominated, military subordination was established, and the possession of land was the pay, which the soldiers received for their personal service.
Robertson, Hist. of Scotland.

The word fee in the northern languages signifies a conditional stipend or reward; and by combination with the northern odh, odhal, or udal, which signifies proprietas, will be formed fee-odh, or feodum, to denote a feodhal, or feudal, or stipendiary property.
Blackstone.

FEUDALISM.* n. s. [from feudal.] The feudal system.

FEUDALITY.* n. s. The state of a chief lord; feodality.
Cotgrave in V. Feodalité.

FEU'DARY.* adj. [from feud.] Holding tenure under a superiour lord.

What greater dividing than by a pernicious and hostile peace to disalliege a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominion of England? Milton, on the Articles of Peace.

FEU'DATARY.† n. s. [old Fr. feudataire; low Lat. feudatarius.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

It was hard to obtain [in the feudal times] the fair feudatary, who was the object of universal adoration.

Warton, Hist. of E. P. vol. i. Diss. 1.

FEU'DATORY.* adj. This word is given by Dr. Johnson as a substantive, with a citation from Bacon, in which it is an adjective, as feudatory; which is the spelling of Bacon. See FEODATORY.

FEU'DIST.* n. s. [old Fr. feudiste.] One learned in the law of feuds or fees; one who writes on them.

Marquesse is as much as a lord of the frontiers; although I know divers other are the derivations which the feudists have imagined.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 7.

The word is to be found in this sense, — in all the feudists.

Brady, Eng. Hist. Gloss. p. 46.

FE'VER.† n. s. [pepen, Sax. fevre, French; febris, Lat.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd,

Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryden.

He had never dreamed in his life, till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

To FE'VER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!

Shake to look on't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,

She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryden.

FE'VER-COOLING.* adj. [fever and cool.] Allaying the heat of fever.

Lay me, reclin'd,

Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,

Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.

Thomson, Summer.

FE'VER-SICK.* adj. [Sax. pepen-peoc.] Diseased with a fever.

Lie down upon thy bed,

Feigning thee fever-sick. Peckler, David and Bethsabe, (1599.)

FE'VER-WEAKENED.* adj. [fever and weaken.] Debilitated by fever.

Fever-weaken'd joints,

Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

FE'VERET. n. s. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe, Parergon.

FE'VERFEW.† n. s. pepenfuge, Sax. febris and fuga, Latin.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Miller.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,

And feverish nature burns in her own fire.

Crouch.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me.

Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will,

When all our ease must come by lying still;

For all the happiness mankind can gain,

Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,

Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;

It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,

And farther from the feverish North retire. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FE'VERISHNESS.† n. s. [from feverish.]

1. A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

2. Mental restlessness.

Satiety, perpetual disgust, and feverishness of desire, perpetually attend those, who passionately study pleasure.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

FE'VEROUS. adj. [fevreux-sc French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous, and did tremble.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,

Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

Milton, P. L.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FE'VEROUSLY.* adv. [from feverous.] In a feverish manner.

A malady

Desp'rately hot, or changing fev'rously. Donne, Poems, p. 77.

FE'VERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head

Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fevery.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

FEU'LLAGE, n. s. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FEU'ILLEMORT.† n. s. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot, or filemot.

————— How ye make

Pale feulemort a pure vermilion tinge —

Fanshawe, Past. Fide, p. 36.

To make a countryman understand what feuillemort signifies, it may suffice to tell him, it is the colour of withered leaves falling in autumn.

Locke, Essay, iii. 11. § 14.

To FEU'TER.* v. a. [old Fr. feutrer.] To make ready. A term of romance.

They feutred their spears.

Hist. of K. Arthur, fol. s. d. sign. H. i.

He his threatful spear

Gan feuter.

Spenser, F. Q.

FEU'TERER.† n. s. [Fr. vautrier, or vaultrier, from vaultre, a kind of mongrel hound; low Lat. vaultarius.] A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel, Dr. Johnson says; but it meant one that led lime-hounds or grey-hounds for the chase. Puntarvolo, "who loves dogs and horses," is called a "yeoman feuterer" in B. Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour. It was also a cant term for a contemptible fellow.

F I A

Such a [favour] as you use to a brace of greyhounds,
When they are led out of their kennels to scumber :

If you will be

An honest yeoman feutercer, feed us first,
And walk us after.

Massinger, Picture.

FEW.† adj. [fæa, fæapa, Saxon; fua, Danish; fauai, Goth. fa, Icel.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but a few of many.

Jer. xlii. 2.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood ;

So many would be great, so few be good ;

For who would virtue for herself regard ;

Or wed without the portion of reward ?

Dryden, Juv.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,

Than foul diseases that infect the fold.

Dryden, Virg.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.

Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more ;

Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

Pope, Hor.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

Swift.

Though one or two of our friends are gone, since you saw your native country, there remain a few.

Pope to Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character.

Berkeley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.

Hooker.

So having said he thus to Eve in few :

Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done ?

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge.

Milton, P. L.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose.

Dryden, Æn.

Pope, Odys.

FE'WEL. n. s. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire : as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils ?

Hooker, Dedic.

Others may give the fewel or the fire ;

But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire.

Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.

Bentley, Serm.

TO FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas ! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame.

Cowley.

FE'WMET.* See FUMET.

FE'WNESS.† n. s. [Sax. feapneſſe.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.

How little substantial doctrine is apprehended by the fewness of good grammarians !

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 50. b.

According to the fewness of years, thou shalt diminish the price of it.

Levit. xxv. 16.

These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied.

Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FEY.† v. a. [veghen, Dutch; faegia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to cleanse.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,

That all a dry summer no water will yield,

By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,

Commodities many the husbandman reaps.

Tusser.

TO FI'ANCE.* v. a. [Fr. fiancer.] To affiancé; to betroth. See TO AFFIANCE.

He hath as it were fianced and betrothed to himself his church.

Harnar, Transl. of Beau's Serm. (1587.) p. 9.

Her, who is called the fianced, or spouse of the bridegroom.

Ibid. p. 203.

F I B

FI'AT.* n. s. [Latin, i. e. be it so, let it be done.]

An order; a decree. Spenser, for the sake of the rhyme, has once written it fiaunt.

I resolve all that into the sole pleasure and fiat of our Omnipotent Creator.

Bentley, Serm. i.

Our hands at length the unchanging fiat bound,

And our glad souls sprung out to meet the sound.

A. Hill, The Wedding Day.

FIB.† n. s. [a cant word among children; perhaps from the Latin fabula.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain

The creature's at his dirty work again.

Pope, Epist.

I so often lie,

Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.

Pope.

TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me.

Arbuthnot.

FI'BER.† n. s. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.

Sherwood.

FIBRE. n. s. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,

And feed their fibres with reviving dew.

Pope.

2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles.

Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,

And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,

Like nature letting down the springs of life :

The name of father awes me still.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

FI'BRIL. n. s. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

FI'BOUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around

A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground ;

This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bays,

The trunk was like a sapling in his hands.

Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FIBULA. n. s. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle.

Quincy.

FICKLE.† adj. [picol, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. But it is originally from the Lat. vucillo, to waver; whence the Dan. vakler, the Sax. picelian, and thus our fickle.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Or likst hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train; Milton, Il Pens.

They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new, Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours! Milton, P. L.

FICKLENESS. n. s. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Spenser, F. Q.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison, Freeholder.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICO.† n. s. [Italian, fica, a flirt with one's fingers, given in disgrace; fare le fica, to bid a fig for one.]

Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to his adversaries Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FICTILE.† adj. [fictil, Fr. fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FCTION. n. s. [fictio, Latin; fiction, French.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting:
there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets' fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she, she lives in afflictions. Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Ralegh.

F I D

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FICTITIOUS.† adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the case; for Daniel, nearly a century before Prior's time, uses it.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,

I verify the truth.

Daniel, Civ. Wars.

With fancied rules and arbitrary laws

Matter and motion man restrains,

And studied lines and fictitious circles draws.

Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictitius, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,

That all who view the piece may know

He needs no trappings of fictitious fame.

Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopopoeia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison, Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY.† adu. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FICTITIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from fictitious.] Feigned representation.

Some make comedy a representation of mean, and others of bad men; some think that its essence consists in the unim-portance, others in the fictitiousness, of the transaction.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 125.

FICTIVE.* adj. [fictif, Fr. fictus, Lat.] Feigned; imaginary.

Time — to those things whose grounds were very true,

Though naked yet and bare, (not having to content

The wayward curious ear,) gave fictive ornament.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

FID. n. s. [flita, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. s. [fridel, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidicula, Latin; fiúll, Erse.] A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle

Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find where-about the tune lay. Addison, Guardian.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon, Ess.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE.† n. s. [A cant word, reduced into the still more ridiculous expression of fid-fad in modern novels, and in nonsensical conversation.] Trifles.

Leave these fiddle-faddles.

Baum, and Fl. Wit without Money.

F I D

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spectator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbuthnot.

FIDDLER. n. s. [Sax. fīdelepe.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no sawcy fiddler presume to intrude, Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. B. Jonson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FIDDLESTICK. n. s. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras.

FIDDLESTRING. n. s. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbuthnot on Air.

FIDELITY. n. s. [fidélitus, Latin; fidélité, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidélity. Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidélity. Clarke.

To FIDGE. v. n. [A cant word, Dr. Johnson
To FIDGET. v. n. says. It seems to be a descendant of the Su. Goth. fika, to move quickly, to be in a great hurry, or in great expectation. See To FIG, v. n.] To move quickly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Behold the graces of each dame! —
How some would dance upright as any bolt,
And some would leap and skip like a young colt;
And some would fidge, as though she had the itch.

Breton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)
To fidge [is] to be fiddling here and there to no manner of purpose. Colgrave in V. Niveter.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out. Swift.

FIDGET. n. s. [from fidge.] Restless agitation.

Why, what can the viscountess mean?
Cried the square hoods in woeful fidget;
The times are alter'd quite and clean. Gray, Long Story.

FIDGETY. adj. [from fidget.] Restless; impatient.
A low word, not used in serious writing.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Such a fiducial persuasion as cannot deceive us.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.
Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond, Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIALLY. adv. [from fiducial.] Undoubtedly; confidently.

It is the Spirit of God alone, that proposes to the soul the grounds of hope, and then by an immediate and Almighty power enables the soul fiducially to close with and rest upon that object, upon those grounds. South, Sermon vi. 472.

F I E

FIDUCIARY. n. s. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Howell.

The fiduciary or letters of credence of the churches.
Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Posit. B. 3.

3. Held in trust.

Envy herself must pronounce that return of his for the acquitting of his fiduciary pledges, to be a most noble act. Howell, Lett. ii. 61.

The High Admiral himself cannot grant it for longer than his own time, being but a trust and fiduciary power. Spekman.

FE.* interj. See Fy. A word of blame or indignation.

FIEF. n. s. [fief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay,
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd. Dryden.
As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. s. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited, not built on.

Every plant of the field, before it was in the earth. Gen. ii. 5.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield. Raleigh.
By the civil law the corpses of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields. Ayliffe, Parerigon.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in enclosed lands. Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground. Mr. Horne Tooke, in the margin of his copy of the dictionary, writes, "where trees have been felled, and therefore fit for cultivation;" and, in his Diversions of Purley, says, "feld-land is opposed to wood-land, meaning land where the trees have been felled."

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain. Pope, Satir.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it. Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a feld should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
What though the feld be lost,
All is not lost. Milton, P. L.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.
Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature. Addison, Spect.
I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace. Bp. Smalridge.
Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and obey. Blackmore, Creation.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

Slight were his arms, a sword, a silver shield,
No marks of honour charg'd its empty field. Dryden, Æn.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pry'thee, make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our fielded friends. Shakespeare, Coriol.

FIELD-BASIL. n. s. [field and basil.] A plant.FIELDBED. n. s. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

thence grievously annoy the defendants. Knolles.

FIELD-PREACHER.  n. s.* [feld and preacher.] One who preaches in a field or open place.

Do you think the popish field-preachers did not first learn their lesson, took no previous steps, made no provision, before they set out upon their expeditions? Read their legends, and be convinced.

Bp. Lavington to Mr. Whitfield, Enthusiasm of Methodists, &c.
vol. i. P. 2. Pref. p. viii.

FIELD-PREACHING.  n. s.* The act of pronouncing an harangue in a field or open place.

The fact you own, both of popish and methodistical field- preaching; you glory in it.

Bp. Lavington to Whitfield, &c. Pref. p. ix.

The judgements of this new apostle [Mr. Wesley] fall only on the members of his own church, for opposing the tumults of field-preaching, and the freaks of what he calls the new birth. Warburton, Doct. of Grace.

FIELDRoom.  n. s.* [field and room.] Unobstructed room; open space.

Falling back where they Might fieldroom find at large. Drayton, Polyolb. 8. 22.

Out of these trees conduct me to fieldroom.

They — had fieldroom enough to expatiate upon the gross iniquity of the covenant. Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 294.

FIELDSports.  n. s.* [field and sport.] Diversions of shooting and hunting.

All gaming, fieldsports, and such sort of amusements, I look upon as frivolous. Ld. Chesterfield.

FIELDY.  adj.* [from field.] Open like a field. This is a very ancient and forgotten, but useful, adjective.

Jesus came down from the hill with them, and stood in a feldy place, [in our present translation, the plain.]

Wicliffe, St. Luke, vi. 17.

FIEND. † n. s. [Sax. fiend, feond, a foe, and also 'the great enemy of mankind, from feogan, fean, fi, to hate. The Iceland. fiende is also the devil. Goth. fiands, Dan. fiende. See also ENEMY.]

1. An enemy; the great enemy of mankind; Satan; the devil.

The fiend is coming down to you, and hath great wrath.

Wicliffe, Revel. xii. 12.

Tom is followed by the foul fiend. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could,
Coming from hell; what fiends would wish should be,
And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food;
The fiend remounts his courser. Dryden, Theod. and Henoria.

O woman! woman! when to ill thy mind
Is bent, all hell contains no fouler fiend. Pope, Odys.

FRIENDFUL.  adj.* [fiend and full.] Full of evil or devilish practices.

Regard his hellish fall,
Whose fiendful fortune may exhort the wise
Only to wonder at unlawful things.

Marlowe, Trag. Hist. of Dr. Faustus.

FRIENDLIKE.  adj.* [fiend and like.] Resembling a fiend; savage; cruel; extremely wicked.

The cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiendlike queen.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The last circumstance recalls a fiendlike appearance drawn by Shakespeare. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. i. 160.

FIERCE. † adj. [fier, French; ferus and ferox, Lat. pherec, Heb. rigour, cruelty.]

And vengeful slaughter, fierce for human blood. Pope.
Tyrants fieros, that unrelenting die. Pope.

With that the god, whose earthquakes rock the ground,
Fierce to Phœacia crost the vast profound. Pope, Odys.

3. Violent; outrageous; vehement.

Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. Gen. xlix. 7.

4. Passionate; angry; furious.

This fierce abridgement
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Shakespeare, Cymb.

A man brings his mind to be positive and fierce for positions whose evidence he has never examined. Locke.

5. Strong; forcible; violent; with celerity.

The ships, though so great, are driven of fierce winds; yet are they turned about with a very small helm. James, iii. 2.

FIERCELY. adv. [from fierce.] Violently; furiously.

Battle join'd, and both sides fiercely fought.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

F I E

The defendants, fiercely assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather.

Bacon.

FIERCEM'NDED.* adj. [ferce and mind.], Vehement in rage; eager of mischief.

The body of the king shook with fear, and forgetfulness seized his fierceminded confidence.

3 Macc. vi. 18. Bp. Wilson's Bible by Crutwell.

FIERCENESS. n. s. [from ferce.]

The ashes, by their heat, their fieriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth.

Boyle.

2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.

The Italians, notwithstanding their natural fieriness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate.

Addison.

FIERY.† adj. [from fire.] Our word was formerly written firy, and is properly so written; and Dr. Johnson, though he takes no such notice of this word, says of wiery that it were better wiry, by reason, no doubt, of its derivation from wire.]

1. Consisting of fire.

Scarcely had Phoebus in the gloomy East

Yet harrowed his fery footed team,

No rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,

When the last deadly smok aloft did steam.

Spenser, F. Q.

I know, thoud'st rather

Follow thine enemy in a fery gulph

Than flatter him in a bower.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. Hot like fire.

Hath thy fery heart so parcht thy entrails,

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. Vehement; ardent; active.

Then fery expedition be my wing,

Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I drew this gallant head of war,

And cull'd these fery spirits from the world,

To outlook conquest, and to win renown

Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death.

Shakspeare, K. John.

4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.

You know the fery quality of the duke;

How unremovable, and fixt he is

In his own course.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He still resolved to give her such a terrible apprehension of his fery spirit, that she should never dream of giving way to her own.

Tatler, No. 231.

5. Unrestrained; fierce.

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fery steed,

F I G

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;

Th' audacious wretch four fery convers drew.

Dryden.

6. Heated by fire.

The sword which is made fery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire.

Hooker.

See! from the brake the whirling pheasant springs,

And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:

Short is his joy; he feels the fery wound,

Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.

Pope.

7. Glaring like fire.

The eyes frie bright,

Liké Gorgon the monster appearing in the night.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 100.

FIFE. n. s. [fifre, Fr.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind-musick:

Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war

That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!

Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,

The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,

Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,

Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds.

Philips.

In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.

Dryden.

Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four,

Myself the fifth.

Pope, Odyss.

2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they express: a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.

The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever.

Swift.

FIFTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.

Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIFTIETH. adj. [fýrteogoða, Sax.] The ordinal of fifty.

If this medium be rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where.

Newton, Opticks.

FIFTY. adj. [fýrtiz, Sax.] Five tens.

A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,

Might shake off fifty looking in her eye.

Shakspeare.

Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens.

1 Mac. iii. 33.

FI'GURABLE. adj. [from figuro, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.

The differences of impossible and not impossible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIGURAB/LITY. n. s. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FI'GURAL. adj. [from figure.]

1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown.

2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.

FI'GURATE.† adj. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. Not literal; figurative.

Under the shadow of figurate location.

Bale on the Revel. P. ii. sign. i. 1.

4. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

5. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.]* That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, synopses, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition.

Harris.

The term figurate which we now employ to distinguish florid from more simple melody, was then used to denote that which was simply rhythmical or accentual

Mason, on Ch. Musick, p. 28.

FI'GURATED.* adj. [Lat. figuratus.] Representing some geometrical figure.

The number 30 is a figurate number, because three times ten, or five times six, make this number.

Potter on the Numb. 666, p. 195.

FIGURA'TION.† n. s. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Figuration is one of those things which unavoidably imply causation: the conception of matter is not that it is a substance figuring and extending, but, a substance actually figured and impenetrably extended. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 377.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

F I G

A very clear memorial, as opposed to the faint shadows and dark intimations of the legal types or figurations.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 28.

3. Mixture of concords and discords in musick. See FIGURATE.

The singing of the Nicene creed, with all the ornaments and figurations of harmony. Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 53.

FI'GURATIVE. adj. [figuralif-ve, Fr. from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereinto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.

Stillingfleet.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden, Juv. Pref.

FI'GURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Bruden.

Satire is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden, Juv. Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks, and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglass, which have four leaves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies, for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

The carpenter — maketh it after the figure of a man.

Isaiah, xlv. 13.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakspeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,

Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden, Virg.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison, Spect.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Richardson, Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden, Juv.

FIG

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison, Spect.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison, Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison, Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocence. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger.

Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts, Logick.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Anthony. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon, Ess.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South, Sermon.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspect of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-slingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who is the figure of him that was to come. Romans, v. 14.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking, in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies
Have blown me full of niaggot ostentation. Shakespeare.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

FIL

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryden, Virg.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance; as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblet for a dish of wood. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakespeare, X. John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:

Oh why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on Medals.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshew.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

To FIGURE. * v. n. To make a figure.

Who figured in the rebellion. Bolingbroke, Sp. of Patriotism, p. 233.

I by this figure-caster must be imagined in such distress as to sue to Maronilla. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Enthusiasts in religion, figure-casters in astrology, are so resolved upon their hypotheses. Spencer on Prod. p. 46.

Quacks, figure-slingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters, cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIL'CEOUS. adj. [from filum, Latin.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

FIL

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FILACER. n. s. [filaxarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. s. [filament, French; filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluviu passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brown.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The over-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air,
And those still strike the next, till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackmore.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILAME'NTOUS.* adj. [from filament.] Like a slender thread.

The doctrine of the filamentous cataract will become as familiar as any established theory among us, only by supposing this, like all other membranes, thickened and become opaque by disorders. The Student, i. 341.

FILANDER.* See FELANDERS.

FILBERT.† n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymological account of this word. Gower gives us a very different one in the following lines: which Mr. Horne Tooke also has agreed with me in noticing:

"With that upon a grene bough
"A seynt of sylke, which she [Phillis] there had,
"She knit; and so herself she lad,
"That she about her white swere
"It did, and henge hirsself there.
"Whereof the goddes were amoved,
"And Demophon was reproved,
"That of the goddes' providence
"Was shape such an evidence
"Ever afterwarde ayen the slowe,
"That Phillis in the same throwe
"Was shape into a nutte tree,
"That all men it might see:
"And after Phillis PHILBERD
"This tree was cleped in the yerd:
"And yet, for Demophon to shame,
"Unto this day it beareth the name."

Confess. Amantis, B. 4.

The filbert is said to have been brought from Pontus. Huloet calls it "Pontica nuc." A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon, Ess.

FIL

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed;
Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind called the filbert of Constantino-ple; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology.

The French word fler, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser on Ireland.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser, Husbandry.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare, Othello.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Barton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L' Estrange.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay, Trivia.

FILCHER.† n. s. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

This filcher of affections. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

FILCHINGLY.* adv. [from the part. filching.] In a thievish manner. Sherwood.

FILE.† n. s. [file, Fr. filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. A thread. Not now used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

Dorothea did not interrupt the file of her history. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quir. iv. 1.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainer, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject-matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file
To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and masters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawney front. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton, P. L.

5. [scil. Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the uneven-ness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters. 1 Sam. xiii. 21.
The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side. Dryden.

6. Style; manner of writing. A Latinism. Not now in use.

And, were it not ill fitting for this file
To sing of hills and woods 'mongst wars and knights,
I would abate the sternness of my stile.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 37.

FILECUTTER. n. s. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE.† v. a. [filer, Fr. from filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

Thou dost file
One lie upon another well. Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 174.
From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

2. [from peulan, Sax.] To cut with a file.
They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

The eminent court—gives their tongues
Sweetness of language; makes them apt to please;
Files off all rudeness, and uncivil haviour.

Deaun, and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filig or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish. This use of the word was formerly frequent, as applied to the tongue; and denoted polished speech. It is a Gallicism, "Avoir la langue bien aflée," Dr. Johnson cites only the example of Shakespeare, without any remark. Gower, Chaucer, and Skelton, afford abundant instances of this usage. Spenser, of course, adopts it; and Dryden thought it worth his notice.

For that old man of pleasing words had store,
And well could file his tongue as smooth as glass.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 35.

There hath flourished in England so fine and filed phrases, and so good and pleasant poets, as may countervayle the doings of Virgil, Ovid, &c.

Gosse, Eplogs, Epitaphs, &c. (1563.) Pref.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

4. [from axylan, Saxon.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland. See FOUL.

The corn is theirs, let others thresh,
Their hands they may not file. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

She lightly leapt out of her filed bed. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 62.

For Beauquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For thou the gracious Demian have I murder'd. Shakspeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and usang'd. Chapman, Iliads.

To FILE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the call
Of chance file off to form the pondrops ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore, Creation.

2. To rank with; to be strung, as it were, upon the same thread or wire.

These, I take it,
Although she love you well,—
Must needs, and reason for it, be examin'd,
And by her modesty; and fear'd too light too,
To file with her affections: You have lost her.

Beaun, and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

FILEMOT. n. s. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filemot, turned up with red. Swift, Direct. for Servants.

FILER.† n. s. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals. Sherwood.

FILIAL. adj. [filial, filiale, Fr. filius, Lat.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.
From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton, P. L.
He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial Godhead answering spoke. Milton, P. L.
Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIA'TION.† n. s. [filiation, Fr. from filius, Lat.]

The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Among all the sons of God, there is none like to that One Son of God. And if there be so great a disparity in the filiation, we must make as great a difference in the correspondent relation. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

FILEBEG.* See FILLIBEG.

FILIGRANE, or FILIGREE Work.* n. s. [Lat. filum, a thread, and granum, grain.] Work, curiously wrought, in the manner of little threads or grains, usually in gold and silver; a kind of wire-work.

Adam and Eve in bugle-work, without fig-leaves, upon canvas, curiously wrought with her ladyship's own hand; several filigrane curiosities. Tatler, No. 245.

The churches of our ancestors shoot up into spires, towers, pinnacles, and filigree work.

Swimburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

FILIGRAINED.* adj. This word explains the preceding, and perhaps fixes the time of its introduction into the language. Steele, as I have shewn, uses filigrane, in the Tatler, that is, in 1710. In the Fop's Dictionary, 1690, filigrain'd, occurs; and, being then not generally intelligible, is defined as the epithet denoting "dressing-boxes, baskets, or whatever else is made of silver wire-work."

FILINGS. † n. s. [from file; without a singular, Dr. Johnson says; yet our old lexicography presents the singular; "A fling, limure, Fr." Sherwood, which Cotgrave renders "file-dust, also a fling."] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Fellon on the Classics.

To FILL. v. a. [Fyllan, Sax.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim. St. John, ii. 7.

I Am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous the space. Milton, P. L.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton, P. L.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his consorted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd,
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton, P. L.
Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakspeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. Rev. xviii. 6.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shakspeare.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

FILL. n. s. [from the verb.]

VOL. II.

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That aye thereof her babes might suck their fill. Spenser, F. Q.
But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.
When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdr. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton, P. L.

Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton, P. L.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham, Sophy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FILLER. † n. s. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. One who stores abundantly.

Brave soldier yield; thou stock of arms and honour,
Thou filler of the world with fame and glory. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

FILLET. n. s. [filet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden, Æn.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope, Windsor Forest.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in logs and fillets for the feast. Dryden, Iliad.

3. Meat rolled together; and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake;
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Ezekiel, xxvii. 10.

To FILL. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

They wear their hair long and filleted. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 376.

2. To adorn with an asragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

FILLING. † n. s. [Gael. filthead-beg, i. e. filthead, a plait or cloth, and beg, little.] Literally, a little plaid; a dress reaching only to the knees, worn by men in the Highlands of Scotland instead of breeches.

F I L

The fillibeg, or lower garment, is still very common, and the bonnet almost universal. Johnson, Journey to the West. Islands.

FILLING.* n. s. [from fill.]

1. Supply.

And why that spiteful character given to all crowds? incre fillings of his own, without warrant from his original.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 54.

2. The act of growing full.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization.

Sharp, Surgery.

To FILLIP.† v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered. This is Dr. Johnson's opinion; but the word may be a corruption of the Latin alapa, a blow, a stroke.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

We see, that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FILLIP.† n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

Man's life is as a glass, and a fillip may crack it.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

A gentleman,

If I, that so much love him, may commend him,
Of free and virtuous parts; and one, if foul play
Should fall upon us, for which fear I brought him,
Will not fly back for fillips.

Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

The dead epicure cannot but subscribe to the truth of Sardanapalus's tomb, which I find storied to have a hand in a posture of filliping, reaching out of the tomb; and the motto, "Omnia nec tanti," all is not worth a fillip.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 549.

FILLY.† n. s. [ffilog, Welsh, a young mare, also a wanton girl; ffeilog, Celt. filia, the fem. of fil, a colt, Iceland.]

1. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-ful horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly tonl.

Shakespeare.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.

Suckling.

2. A wanton girl: a flirt.

A skittish filly will be your fortune, Welford.

Beaum. and El. Scornful Lady.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet.

Addison, Spect.

FILM. n. s. [film, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle.

Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that profits'd clearer sight
Had bred.

Milton, P. L.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies.

Bentley, Serm.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day.

Pope, Messiah.

F I L

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,

Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,

Infects unseen.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FILMY.† adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

He shewed me a little excrescence that he hath beginning upon the uttermost ball of his eyes, a filmy matter, like the rudiment of a pin and web as they call it.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1628,) Rem. p. 441.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,

Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;

And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,

Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.

Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound, till death

Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom

Philips.

Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,

Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;

Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,

Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes.

Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtr, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it.

Grew, Museum.

FILTER. n. s. [filtrum, Lat.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter.

Ray on the Creation.

FILTH.† n. s. [filð, Sax. fyla, Icel. Wicliffe writes filth-heed for the state of being defiled, Apoc. 14.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;

Filths savour but themselves.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot

Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root.

Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout

He wildly flings his filth about;

He still has gratitude and sap'ence,

To spare the folks that give him hap'ence.

Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights.

Tillotson.

FILTHY.† adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

If she do not paint, she will look so filthily, thou canst not love her!

Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 572.

It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless.

L' Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness.

Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time,

FIN

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser, F. Q.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South, Serm.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden, Duſſenoy.

TO FILTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain;
to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind,

Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s. [corrupted from female.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be soon;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

TO FIMBRIATE.* v. a. [Lat. fimbriatus.] To fringe; to hem. Fimbriated is still an heraldick term for bordered.

Besides the divers tricking or dressing [heraldick crosses;]
as piercing, voiding, fimbriating, &c. inasmuch that crosses alone, as they are variously disguised, are enough to distinguish all the several families of gentlemen in England.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 271.

FIN. n. s. [Fin, Sax. vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with *fin*s of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare, Othello.

Their *fin*s consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. More against Atheism.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their *fin*s awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fig. Addison, Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [from fin and foot.] Palmipedous;
having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in lati-rostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with *fin*s or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable.

Bacon.

FIN

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, Fr. finalis, Lat.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant Death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton, P. L.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Cotter on Thought.

FINALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight hereav'd

May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton, S. A.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.

Doubtlessly many men are finally lost, who yet have no
men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE. n. s. [French. With the accent on the second syllable; though Dr. Johnson places it on the first. It may be curious to observe, that we formerly used the word finance in the sense of an end; and that, in the enlarged edition of Bullokar, 1656, it has found a place. But it had then been long obsolete.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures. Bacon.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbuthnot.

FINANCIAL.* adj. [from finance.] Respecting finance-
A modern word.

Europe was filled with astonishment, when they saw England borrow in one year twelve millions. It was thought, and very justly, no small proof of national strength and financial skill, to find a fund for the payment of the interest upon this sum. Burke on the State of the Nation, (1769.)

FINANCIER. n. s. [French. This is a word of considerable age in our language, though hitherto unnoticed; for Dr. Johnson has given no example, and Mr. Mason has found the word only in the writings of Burke, who indeed often uses it.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue; one who understands the publick revenue.

I therefore, whom only love and duty to your majesty and your royal line hath made a financier, do intend to present unto your majesty a perfect book of your estate, like a perspective glass to draw your estate nearer to your sight.

Bacon to K. James I. 2. Jan. 1613, Caput, p. 9.

FIN

FIN'ARY. n. s. [from To fine.] In the iron works, the second forge at the iron mills. Dict.

FINCH. † n. s. [finch, Sax. finck, Teut. from the bird's note, vink, vink. Vossius, and Lyc.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bullfinch.

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,
The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer may. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

To FIND. † v. a. [finban, Sax. vinden, Dutch; finthan, M. Goth. finna, Su. Goth.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find.

St. Matt. vii. 7.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff?

Gen. xxxi. 37.

She disappear'd, and left me dark; I wak'd

To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss.

Milton, P. L.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings.

Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing.

St. Luke, xv. 5.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way, with more advised watch,

To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,

I oft found both. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To obtain something desired.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used

Permissive, and acceptance found.

Milton, P. L.

Our voluntary service he requires,

Not our necessitated; such with him

Finds no acceptance, nor can find.

Milton, P. L.

4. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find

Suspicion with her eyes behind.

Dodsley's Miscell.

In woods and forests thou art found.

Cowley.

The bad must miss, the good unsought shall find.

Pope.

5. To know by experience.

How oft will he

Of thy chang'd faith complain!

And his fortunes find to be

So airy and so vain!

Cowley.

The torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

6. To come to; to attain.

The sun that barren shines,

Whose virtue on itself works no effect,

But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd

His beams, unactive else, their vigour find.

Milton, P. L.

7. To discover by study, or attention.

The fox that first the cause of grief did find,

Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Physicians

With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find.

Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,

Whereon thy doubts to place.

Cowley.

8. To discover what is hidden.

A curse on him who found the oak.

Cowley.

9. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident.

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,

'Tis but because there was no wind.

Cowley.

10. To gain by any mental endeavour.

I by conversing cannot these erect

From prone, nor in their ways complacence find.

If we for happiness could leisure find,

And wand'ring time into a method bind,

We should not then the great men's favour need.

Cowley.

FIN

We oft review, each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and something to commend.

Pope.

11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.

Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleased

And find thee knowing not of beast alone,

Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself.

Milton, P. I.

Beauty or wit in all I find.

Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it.

Locke.

13. To reach; to attain.

They are glad when they can find the grave.

Job, iii. 22.

They also know,

And reason not contemptibly; with these

Find pastime, and bear rule.

Milton, P. L.

In solitude

What happiness, who can enjoy alone,

Or all enjoying, what contentment find?

Milton, P. L.

He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,

Yet found them not so large as was his mind.

Cowley.

14. To meet.

A clear conscience and heroick mind,

In ill their business and their glory find.

Cowley.

15. To settle; to fix any thing in one's own opinion.

Some men

The marks of old and catholick would find.

Cowley.

16. To determine by judicial verdict.

They would enforce them to find as they would direct; and if they did not, convent, imprison, and fine them.

Bacon.

His peers, upon this evidence,

Hayc found him guilty of high treason. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

17. To supply; to furnish: as, he finds me in money and in victuals.

A war with Spain is like to be lucrative, if we go roundly on at first; the war in continuance will find itself.

Bacon.

He that shall marry thee, had better spend the poor remainder of his days, in a dung-barge, for two-pence a week, and find himself.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman Hater.

Still govern thou my song,

Urania, and fit audience find, though few.

Milton, P. L.

18. [In law.] To approve: as, to find a bill.

To find a bill, there must at least twelve of the [grand] jury agree.

Blackstone.

19. To purpose; to find in one's heart, as we now often say. Spenser, for the sake of the rhyme, writes the word find instead of found.

In the sea to drown herself she found,

Rather than of that tyrant to be caught.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 26.

She found in her heart, she chose rather to drown herself than to be caught of that tyrant.

Upton on Spenser.

20. To FIND himself. To be; to fare with regard to ease or pain, health or sickness.

Pray, sir, how d'ye find yourself? says the doctor.

L'Estrange.

21. To FIND out. To unriddle; to solve.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind.

Ecclus. xiii. 26.

22. To FIND out. To discover something hidden.

Can'st thou by searching find out God? Can'st thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

Job, ii. 7.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out.

Newton.

What hinders then, but that thou find her out,

And hurry her away by manly force?

Addison, Cato.

23. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful.

Dryden.

24. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.

2 Chron. ii. 14.

25. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by.

Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper.

Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning.

Addison, Spect.

26., To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occursion.

FINDER.† n. s. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,
May galle the finder's conscience, if they meet.

Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer.

Crashaw.

3. A discoverer; an inventor.

I curse the fiddling finders out of musick.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

FINDFAULT.† n. s. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults.

Shakespeare.

Railers, grudgers, persecutors, findfaults.

Trans. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 42.

FINDFAULTING.* adj. [from findfault.] Cavilling; captious.

She doth not set business back by unquiet branglings and findfaulting quarrels.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 347.

FINDING.* n. s. [from find.]

1. Discovery by study.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind.

Eccclus. xiii. 26.

2. Discovery by chance.

Go you the next way with your findings.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

3. In law, the return made by the jury to the bill of indictment.

FINDY. adj. [feinbriz, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy,

Makes the barn fat and findy;
means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain.

Junius.

FINE.† adj. [fine, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin. Serenius notices the Iceland. fynnr, beautiful, polished.]

1. Not coarse.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare.

Spenser.

He was arrayed in purple and fine linen.

St. Luke, xvi. 19.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

Ezra, viii. 27.

3. Subtile; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

This is a pleasant citie—

The ayre subtile and fine.

Trag. of Damon and Pythias.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser things shew greater: but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer.

Bacon.

4. Refined; subtilely excogitated.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts.

Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine.

Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit.

Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,

B. Jonson.

Or call up the master.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the soul

Nought but a fine perfection of the sense.

Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving.

Morson, Mech. Exerc.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof.

Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,

He all those royal signs had stol'n away.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine.

Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.

Spence.

12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars.

Felton on the Classics.

13. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it.

Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy.

Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:

A fine exchange for liberty.

Philips, Briton.

15. Taper; slender.

Like a crane, his neck was long and fyne.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 21.

They gather'd flowers to fill their flasket,

And with fine fingers cropt full feateously

The tender stalks.

Spenser, Prothalamion.

Her cheeks all white-red ———

And such fine fingers.

A. Fraunce, Countess of Pemb. Inychurch, (1591,) sign. G. 4.

No longer shall the bodice aptly lac'd

From thy full bosom to thy slender waste

That air and harmony of shape express,

Fine by degrees, and beautifully less.

Prior.

FINE. n. s. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke.

Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.

Even this ill night your breathing shall expire,

Paying the fine of rated treachery.

Shakespeare, K. John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Shakespeare.

FIN

Beside finer set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity.

Addison.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!

Pope.

4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is now seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmunc, the powers of his spirit depending of her.

Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other.

Hooker.

Still the fine's the crown;

Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.

Shakspeare.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,

Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;

In fine, delivers me to fill the time,

Herself most chastely absent.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind.

L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,

With sores and sicknesses beleagu'rd round.

Dryden, Juv.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece.

The fineness of the colours, and richness of the stuff.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 72.

3. Subtility; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,

By reason guide his execution. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

It [the Directory] should have been composed with so much artifice and fineness, that it might have been to all the world an argument of their learning and excellency of spirit, if not of the goodness and integrity of their religion and purposes.

Lip. Taylor, on Extempore Prayer.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,

To find persistive constancy in men;

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. Smoothness; not coarseness.

This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

FIN

To FINGER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;

You would be finering them to anger me. Shakspeare.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

Up from my cabin,

My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark

Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;

Finger'd their packet; and, in fine, withdrew

To mine own room again; making so bold,

My fears forgetting manners, to unseal

Their grand commission. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

You would fain be finering

This old sin-offering of two hundred, Tranio.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

His ambition would needs be finering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South, Serm.

3. To touch an instrument of musick.

You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;

Who, finger'd to make man his lawful musick,

Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

FINGERING.* n. s. [from finger.]

1. The act of touching lightly, of toying with.

One that is covetous, is not so highly pleased with the mere sight and finering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

2. The manner of touching an instrument of musick.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my finering,

I must begin with rudiments of art.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

She hath broke the lute —

I did but tell her she mistook her frets,

And bow'd her hand to teach her finering.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

3. Work exquisitely performed with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of finering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGERSTONE. n. s. [finger and stone; elenites, Lat.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

FINGLEFANGLE. n. s. [from fangle.] A trifle: a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,

About the slightest finglefangle. Hudibras

FINICAL. adj. [from fin.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorson, glazegazing, superserviceable, finical rogue.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I cannot bear a finical sop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. Estrange.

FINICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FINICALNESS.† n. s. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

FIN

It is for such little writers as the preacher of Lincoln's Inn to hide their barrenness by the finicalness of culture.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 50. note.

To FINISH. v. a. [finir, French; finio, Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? St. Luke, xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Cor. viii. 6.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Broome on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find, Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd; It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FINISH. * n. s. [from the verb.] A word sometimes used by artists, meaning the last touch or polish of the composition. See FINISHING.

FINISHER. n. s. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher, Off does them by the weakest minister. Shakspeare.

2. One that puts an end; tender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocence, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews, xii. 2.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher Of utmost hope! Millon, P. L.

FINISHING. * n. s. [from finish.]

1. Completion.

They hindered the finishing of the building. 1 Esdr. v. 73.

2. The last touch of a composition.

Sallust arose to give it [the Roman history] the last finishing of art and genius. Warburton on Prodiges, p. 73.

FINITE. adj. [fnitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. * Brown, Vulg. Err.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited to two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brady, Vulg. Err.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finutely distant from us. Stillington.

FINITENESS. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorized word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FIN

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me

With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
Add untaught Indian, on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FINNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough.

Mortimer.

FINNIKIN. * n. s. The name of a particular species of pigeon. Chambers.

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny coursers guides;
Proteus his name. Dryden, Virg.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryden, Ovid.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny shoals, Blackmore.
With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

FINTOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole-footed, or fin-toed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray on the Creation.

FINSCALE. * An English name for the river fish called the ruffid. Chambers.

FIPPLE. n. s. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straiteneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIR. n. s. [fyrr, Welsh; fyrh, Saxon; fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green: the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

1 Kings, vi. 15.

The spiring fir and stately box.

Pope.

FIR-TREE. * n. s. The tree called fir.

The fir-trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon.

Isaiah, xiv.

FIRE. † n. s. [fyr, Saxon; fewr, German; fyr, Icel. and Su. "Vox antiquissima Scytho-Phrygica." Serenius.]

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;
Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire.

Dryden.

2. Any thing burning.

F I R

F I R

- A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
- Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.
So contraries on Ætna's top conspire;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire.
Cowley.
3. A conflagration of towns or countries.
There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire.
Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be
Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee.
Granville.
4. Flame; light; lustre.
Stars, hide your fires!
Let not night see my black and deep desires!
Shakespeare, Macbeth.
5. Torture by burning.
Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire?
Prior.
6. The punishment of the damned.
Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?
Isa. xxxiii. 14.
7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.
What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much?
Shakespeare.
8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.
He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and upon provocations, might strain a phrase.
One of my companions was a scholar with fire; and the other a soldier of the same complexion. My learned man would fall into disputes, and argue without any manner of provocation or contradiction. The other was decisive without words, and would give a shrug or an oath to express his opinion.
Atterbury. Tatler, No. 61.
9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.
Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them.
Cowley. Felton on the Classics.
- He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons, and the poet's fire.
Exact RACING, and CORNEILLE's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire.
The bold LONGINUS all the nine inspire,
And warm the critic with a poet's fire.
Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire.
Blackmore. Pope. Pope. Pope.
10. The passion of love.
Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames, tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns.
The god of love retire;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fire.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire.
Dryden. Shadwell. Pope. Moore's Fables.
11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.
12. To set FIRE on, or set on FIRE. To kindle; to inflame.
Hermosilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turks' horses stood.
Knolles.

- He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention.
Ep. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
13. To set a FIRE. To inflame.
So inflam'd by my desire,
It may set her heart a-fire.
Carew.
14. A Fellow of FIRE. A term, in queen Anne's time, for the modern buck or blood; the latter of which Dr. Johnson defines "a man of fire." See BLOOD.
You see, in the very air of a fellow of fire, something so expressive of what he would be at, that, if it were not for self-preservation, a man would laugh out.
Tatler, No. 61.
- To FIRE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on fire; to kindle.
They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteem'd not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain.
The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile.
A second Paria, diff'ring but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame.
Dryden. Dryden, Bn.
2. To inflame the passions; to animate.
Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous princess, with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right.
Dryden.
3. To drive by fire.
He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n
And fire us hence.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.
4. To cauterize. A term of surgery.

Spenser.

I am constant as the northern star,

Of whose true, fixt, and resting quality,

There is no fellow in the firmament.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament.

Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

The firmament expanse of liquid, pure,

Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd

F I R

In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round.

Milton, P. L.

The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;

And when the middle firmament they gain,

If downward from the heavens my head I bow,

And see the earth and ocean hang below,

Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror.

Addison, Ovid.

What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses!

Derham, Astro-Theology.

FIRMAMENTAL. adj. [from firmament.] Celestial; of the upper regions.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,

In firmamental waters dipt above.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

FIRMAN, or PHIRMAN.* n. s. [Arab. firmān.] A grant or licence given by Asiatick potentates.

In persons already possessed with notions of religion, the understanding cannot be brought to change them, but by great examination of the truth and firmness of the one, and the flaws and weakness of the other.

South, Sermon.

4. Steadiness; constancy; resolution.

That thou should'st my firmness doubt

To God, or thee, because we have a foe

May tempt us, I expected not to hear.

Milton, P. L.

Nor can th' Egyptian patriarch blame my muse,

Which for his firmness does his heat excuse.

Roscommon.

This armed Job with firmness and fortitude.

Atterbury.

FIRST. adj. [first, Saxon.]

1. The ordinal of one; that which is in order before any other.

Thy air,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first.

— A third is like the former.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

F I R

In the six hundredth and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth. Gen. viii. 13.

Earliest in time: opposed to last.

The first covenant had also ordinances of divine service.

Man's first disobedience. Heb. ix. 1.

Who first, who last Milton, P. L.

Arms and the man I sing, the first who bore
His course to Latium from the Trojan shore. Dryden, Æn.

I find, quoth Mat, reproof is vain!
Who first offend, will first complain. Prior.

Foremost in place.

Highest in dignity.

Three presidents, of whom Daniel was first. Dan. vi. 2.

First with the dogs, and king among the squires. Spect.

'Tis little Will, the scourge of France,

No godhead, but the first of men. Prior.

Great; excellent.

My first son,
Where will you go? Take good Cominius
With thee. Shakspeare, Coriol.

FIRST. adv.

Before any thing else: earliest.

He, not unmindful of his usual art,
First in dissembled fire attempts to part;
Then roaring beasts and running streams he tries. Dryden.

Thy praise, and thine was then the publick voice,
First recommended Guiscard to my choice. Dryden.

Heav'n, sure, has kept this spot of earth uncurs'd,
To shew how all things were created first. Prior.

Before any other consideration.

First, metals are more durable than plants; secondly, they are more solid and hard; thirdly, they are wholly subterranean;
whereas plants are part above earth, and part under the earth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It has often at before it, and means at the beginning.

At first the silent venom slid with ease,
And seiz'd her cooler senses by degrees. Dryden, Æn.

Excepting fish and insects, there are very few or no creatures that can provide for themselves at first, without the assistance of parents. Bentley, Serm.

FIRST or last. At one time or other.

But sure a general doom on man is past,
And all are fools and lovers first or last. Dryden.

FIRST-BEGOT. } n. s. [from first and begot.]
FIRST-BEGOTTEN. } The eldest of children.

His First-begot we know, and sore have felt,
When his fierce thunder drove us to the deep. Milton, P. R.

FIRST-BORN. n. s. [from first and born.] Eldest; the first by the order of nativity.

Last, with one mid-day stroke, all the first-born.
Of Egypt must lie dead. Milton, P. L.

The first-born has not a sole or peculiar right, by any law of of God and nature; the younger children having an equal title with him. Locke.

FIRST-BORN. * adj. Eldest.

If the first-born son be her's that was hated. Deut. xxi. 15.

Hail, holy Light, offspring of Heaven first-born.
Milton, P. L.

any kind.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton, P. L.

The blooming hopes of my then very young patron have been confirmed by most noble first-fruits, and his life is going on towards a plentiful harvest of all accumulated virtues. Prior.

F I S

2. The first profits of any thing.

Although the king loved to employ and advance bishops, because, having rich bishopricks, they carried their reward upon themselves; yet he did use to raise them by steps, that he might not lose the profit of the first-fruits, which by that course of gradation was multiplied. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. The earliest effect of any thing.

See, Father, what first-fruits on earth are sprung,
From thy implanted grace in man! Milton, P. L.

FIRSTLING. adj. [from first.] That which is first produced or brought forth.

All the firstling males that come of thy herd, and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God. Deut. xv. 19.

FIRSTLING. n. s. [from first.]

1. The first produce or offspring.

A shepherd next,
More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock,
Choicest and best. Milton, P. L.

The tender firstlings of my woolly breed,
Shall on his holy altar often bleed. Dryden, Virg.

The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die. Pope.

2. The first thing thought or done.

Our play
Japes o'er the vaunt and firstlings of these broils,
'Ginning' the middle. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress. Prol.
The flighty purpose works o'erlook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FIRSTRATE. * adj. A term of modern adoption,

Castille, is likewise a man of letters.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 42.

FISCAL. * adj. [from fiscal, Fr. fiscalis, Lat.] Belonging to the publick treasury; coming to the publick purse.

It behoveth the prince to have a vigilant eye on such fiscal ministers, whose cruelty and covetous proceedings do oftentimes occasion great hate. Raleigh, Arts of Empire, p. 62.

FISH. † n. s. [Fryc, Saxon; visch, Dutch; fisks, Goth. "consensu omnium Dialect. Scytho-Scandicularum," Serenius. Lat. piscis. Fish is both singular and plural; fishes is the less usual plural.]

1. An animal that inhabits the water. Fish is used collectively for the race of fishes.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

And now the fish ignoble fates escape,
Since Venus ow'd her safety to their shape. Creech.

There are fishes, that have wings, that are not strangers to the airy region; and there are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes; and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. The flesh of fish opposed to that of terrestrial animals, by way of eminence called flesh.

F I S

I fight when I cannot chuse, and I eat no fish.

We mortify ourselves with the diet of fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from the flesh of other animals.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FISH. † v. n. [Sax. fiscian.]

1. To be employed in catching fishes.

Their manner of hawking, fishing, riding, &c.

A sharp point, bended upward and backward, like a fish-hook.

Greiv, Museum.

FISH-POND. n. s. [fish and pond.] A small pool for fish.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew, And hills were levell'd to extend the view.

Prior.

After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirrius should sell his fish-ponds for quadragies H. S. 32, 291. 13s. 4d.

Arbutnot.

FISHER. † n. s. [fiscepe, Sax.] One who is employed in catching fish.

They were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

St. Matt. iv. 18, 19.

In our sight the three were taken up

By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:

At length another seiz'd on us,

And would have reft the fishers of their prey,

Had not they been very slow of sail.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

We know that town is but with fishers fraught,

Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught.

Sandys.

Lest he should suspect it, draw it from him,

As fishers do the bait, to make him follow it.

Denham.

A soldier now he with his coat appears;

A fisher now, his trembling angle bears.

Pope.

FISHERBOAT. † n. s. [fisher and boat.] A boat employed in catching fish.

The king went down to a miserable fisherboat, that Hales had provided for carrying them over to France.

Burnet, Hist. own Times, 1688.

FISHERMAN. n. s. [fisher and man.] One whose employment and livelihood is to catch fish.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!

The fishermen that walk upon the beach

Appear like mice.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

At length two monsters of unequal size,

Hard by the shore, a fisherman espies.

Waller.

Do scales and fins bear price to this excess?

You might have bought the fisherman for less.

Dryden, Juv.

FISHERTOWN. n. s. [fisher and town.] A town inhabited by fishermen.

Others of them, in that time, burned that fishertown Mouse-hole.

Like in Dorsetshire, a little fishertown.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

By a fall or blow the skull may be fissured or fractured.

Wiseman, Surgery.

FIST.† n. s. [fȳt, Saxon, probably from pæȳt, fast, firm; but Minshew derives it from the Belg. fassen, to catch hold of.] The hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.

She quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,

Up with her fat, and took him on the face;

Another time, quoth she, become more wise;

Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

And being down, the villain sore did beat

And bruise with clownish fists his manly face. Spenser, F. Q.

Anger causeth paleness in some; in others trembling, swelling, and bending the fat. Bacon.

And the same hand into a fat may close,

Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fat. Dryden, Æn.

To FIST. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I saw him spurning and fisting her most unmercifully.

Dryden.

2. To gripe with the fist.

We have been down together in my sleep,

Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,

And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare, Coriol.

FISTINUT. n. s. A pistachio nut.

FISTICUFFS. n. s. [fist and cuff.] Battle with the fist; blows with the fist.

Naked men belabouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fisticuffs. Morc.

FISTULA. n. s. [Latin; fistule, French.]

1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.

That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. FISTULA Lachrymalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease: in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lachrymalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp, Surgery.

FISTULAR. adj. [from fistula.] Hollow like a pipe.

To FISTULATE. * v. n. To turn or grow to a fistula.

Bullockar.

To FISTULATE. * v. a. To make hollow like a pipe; to perforate.

The beginnings or first stamina in animals are their tubes, pipes or ducts, fistulated, or hollowed, to circulate the blood and juices. The Student, ii. 379.

FISTULOUS. adj. [from fistula; fistuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.

How the sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn you.

Wiseman, Surgery.

FIT.† n. s. [from fight, Skinner, every fit of a disease being a struggle of nature; from vit, in Flemish, frequent, Junius. Junius also notices the similarity of the Fr. viste, quick, sudden; and adds that the Flemish verb vitsstin means, "habitu alicujus rei frequenter agendo consequi;" referring to the Gr. φίττα, an adverb signifying haste, as the origin.]

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.

Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try

A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden, Horace.

Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.

By fits my swelling grief appears,

In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.

'Thus o'er the dying leap th' unsteady flame

Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,

And falls again as loth to quit its hold. Addison, Cato.

Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct.

Rogers, Sermon.

All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.

The life did fit away out of her nest,

And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress. Spenser, F. Q.

An ambitious man puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband,

He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows

The fits o' th' season. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children; and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.

Mrs. Bull was so much covaged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

6. It was anciently used for any recommencement after intermission. The parts of a song, or cantos of a poem, were called fits. So were sections or chapters of a book. The word was also used for a strain in musick, and for a measure in dancing.

The first fit here find we. Old Poem of John the Reve.
The fyrst fit of Anselme with king Wylliam Rufus.

Bale, Eng. Vol. P. II. (1550.) sign. H. 7. b.

The trompettours blow a fyfte. Horm. Fulgaria.

Who knoweth where is ere a mynstrell?

By the masse, I would fayne go daunce a fitte.

Yet show, sirs, of your country wit. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Fit. adj. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

Men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle.

1 Chron. vii. 11.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,
The fittest help just fortune could afford. Cowley, Davideis.

This fury fit for her intent she chose,
One who delights in wars and human woes. Dryden, Æn.

It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have said it were good not to see men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon.

To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet.

Milton, P. L.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.

To Fit. v. a. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he *fitte*th it with planes. Is. xlv. 13.

Would fate permit
To my desires I might my fortune fit, Troy I would raise. Denham.

2. To accommodate a person with any thing: as, the tailor fits his customer.

A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of boddices, stiffened on the lame side. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing or person; to become. The example from Sidney is placed by Dr. Johnson under the verb neuter.

How evil fits it me to have such a son; and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness. Sidney.

She shall be our messenger to this paltry knight: trust me I thought on her; she'll fit it. Shakspeare.

But the same things, sir, fit not you and me.

Beaumont and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, fitted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Boyle.

4. To Fit out. To furnish; to equip; to supply with necessities or decoration.

And which if you dare but twice fit out,
You shall be under'd, and be thought devout. Dryden.

The Fit fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison, Frecholder.

5. To Fit up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has fitted up his farm.

Pope to Swift.

To Fit. v. n. To be proper; to be becoming.

Nor fits it to prolong the feast
Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest.

Pope, Odyssey.

FITCH. n. s. [A colloquial corruption of vetch, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Tusser. Yet the translators of our present version of the Bible did not disdain to employ the word. It is also in our old lexicography.] A small kind of wild pea.

Now is the season,
For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of peason. Tusser.

The fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument.

Isaiah, xxviii. 27.

Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches. Ezek. iv. 9.

FITCHAT. n. s. [fissau, French; fisse, Dutch.]

FITCHEW. } A stinking little beast that robs the henroost and warren. Skinner calls him the stinking ferret, but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the polecat is termed a fitchat, and the stinking ferret a stoat. The ferret is called a fitche, in the old dictionary of Sherwood; and in that of Bullokar, enlarged in 1656, the fur of the pole-cat is termed fitche. Our fitche is sometimes called fitchel, and also foumart.

'Tis such another fitche! marry, a perfum'd one:

What do you mean by this haunting of me? Shakspeare.

The fitchat, the fulmart, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton, Angler.

FITFUL. adj. [fit and full.] Varied by paroxysms; disordered by change of maladies.

Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FITLY. adv. [from fit.]

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Even so most fitly

As you malign our senators.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie a pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,

Sun or stars are fitliest view'd

At their brightest; but to conclude

Of longitudes, what other way have we

But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

An animal, in order to be movable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FITNESS. n. s. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgement of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit.

Hooker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness

That we adjourn this court. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place

Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:

They've made themselves, and that their fitness now

Does unmake you.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FITMENT. n. s. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeching; 'twas a filment for
The purpose I then followed. Shakespeare, Cymb.
FITTABLE.* adv. [from fit.] Suitable. Not now in use. Sherwood.

FITTER.† n. s. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A small piece: as, to cut into fitters. [from fetta, Italian; setzen, German.] Skinner.

Where's the Frenchman? —

FITTINGLY.* adv. [from the part. fitting.] Properly; suitably.

It is rightly termed a new name, and very fittingly writ upon these Philadelphians. More on the Sev. Churches, p. 138.

Which abstract terms do very fittingly agree with the notion we have put upon this symbolical earth.

More, Conj. Cabb. p. 142.

FITZ. n. s. [Norman, from fits, a son, Fr.] A son.
Only used in law and genealogy: as, Fitzherbert,
the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE.† adj. [fif, Saxon; funf, German; funf, Goth. quinque, Latin.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

St. Matt. xxv. 2.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Five herds, five bleating flocks his pastures fill. Dryden.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison.

FIVEBAR.* } adj. [five and bar.] Having five FIVEBARRED. } bars; usually applied to gates.

O check the foamy bit, nor tempt thy fate;

Think of the murders of a fivebar gate!

Gay, Birth of the Squire.

There master Betty leaps a fivebar'd gate, Young, Satire, 5.

FIVEFOLD.* adj. [five and fold.] Having five distinctions; composed of five materials.

We may observe a fivefold difference among the creatures.

Fotherby, Atheom, p. 176.

And bids his men bring out the fivefold twist. W. Browne.

FIVELEAF.* n. s. Cinquefoil.

Campana here he crops —

And from the falling-ill by fiveleaf doth restore,

And melancholy cures by sovereign hellchore.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

FIVELEAVED GRASS.† n. s. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

Fiveleaved grass, or cinquefoil, groweth in low and shadowy places, sometimes by the water-side; it is dry in the third degree. Barret, Alv. 1580.

FIVES. n. s.

1. A kind of play with a ball.

2. A disease of horses.

His horse sied with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark spoiled with the staggers.

Shakespeare.

TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard the insufferable noise, hell saw
Heaven running from heav'n, and would have fled Afrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milton, P. L.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell

In which of all these orbs hath man

His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,

But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milton, P. L.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,

gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight!

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

* Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,

Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprise. Dryden, Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed.

Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,

A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs.

Sandy.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,

T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To die undaunted, or to circumvent.

Dryden, Æn.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this, her utmost remedy,

Death was behind; but hard it was to die.

Dryden.

In most bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by.

Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,

Resolv'd to fix for ever here.

Waller.

3. To lose volatility; so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIXA'TION.† n. s. [French, fixation.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

Which some would fain set up as idols to such an immovable fixation, as if it were impious to endeavour to remove them.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 57.

A vehement desire of affection, with an unalterable fixation of resolution. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 32.

The fixation of your creed, sir, is the great object. — Hitherto the custom has been to fix creeds from Scripture. But Scripture you seem prepared to discard, whenever it does not please you. Horne, Lett. to Dr. Priestley, p. 7.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or plianthness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less materiate, than to make silver of lead or quick-silver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes.

Glanville, Scepis.

FIXEDLY.† adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Stedfastly.

Her look is squint, with which wishly beholding one, she fixedly looketh upon another.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 71.

Omnipotency, omniscieny, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fixedly looks on them. Burket.

FIXEDNESS.† n. s. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

The heavens, or any part of them, never stood still, but once, since they were made; but the earth was made for fixedness and stability. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 66.

The fixedness of the eternal Fates.

More, Song of the Soul, ii. 114.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

The peril that arises to the heart from passion, is the fixedness of it, when, like a corroiving plaster, it eats into the sore.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIX'DITY. n. s. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. s. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and re-action between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them?

Newton, Opticks.

FIXT.* part. of the verb fix. Fixed. See To fix.

FIXTURE.* n. s. [from fixt.] This word is unwarrantably inserted in some editions of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary; which has led Mr. Mason into an absurd and unjust attack upon Dr. Johnson for having arbitrarily altered fixure into fixture, to suit his purpose for the latter word. Mr. Mason accordingly introduces fixure in his supplement, as if it had never before been noticed. But the fact is, that Dr. Johnson never noticed fixture; and that fixure is the word in his own editions of his work, as it really is in the passages which he cites from Shakspeare to illustrate it. Fixture, however, has been unaccountably given of late years in the Dictionary, with the examples from Shakspeare altered; and fixure has been as unjustly omitted. Fixture is a modern word.] That which is fixed; a piece of furniture fixed to a house; as, he took the fixtures at a fair valuation.

FIXURE.† n. s. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't, As we were mock'd with art. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Whose glorious fixure in so clear a sky. Drayton, Baron's Wars, C. 1.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakspeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

VOL. 11.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate

The unity and married calm of states

Quite from their fixure. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

FIZGIG.† n. s. [properly fishgig, a sea term.]

1. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Canst thou with figg pierce him to the quick,

Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick. Sandys, Job.

Such [dolphins] we salted as we could entice to taste our hooks or *figg*s. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 25.

We saw also abundance of flying fish, and their continual enemies, the allicore and dolphin; the latter we strike now and then with a figg or harping-iron. Atkins, Voyage, p. 33.

2. A kind of firework, which boys make up in paper, and explode. [from fixz.]

To FIZZ.* } v. n. [Icel. and Goth. fisa; fis, a puff or
To FIZZLE. } blast; Lat. visire.] To emit a slight and transient noise, or a slight continued noise; to make a kind of hiss. Ainsworth and others apply the latter of these words to suppressing wind from behind, i. e. to fust.

FLABBY.† adj. [flaccidus, Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but it is probably from the Teut. flabbe, a flap to drive away flies, originally any thing limber or pendulous; or, as Serenius deduces it, from the Swed. "flabb, bucca, labium pendulum," who adds the adjective "flabbig, bucculentus," i. e. having blubbered lips.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLABEL.* n. s. [Lat. flabellum.] A fan. Obsolete. Huloet, and Sherwood.

FLABILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown. Dict.

FLACCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beateth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FLACCIDITY. n. s. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wiseman, Surgery.

To FLAG.† v. n. [flaggheren, old Teutouick, to be loosened; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,

Who with their drowy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,

The promise of a storm; the shifting galls

Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

*My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.*

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison, Spect.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG.† v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

The thought of dying may cool appetite and passion; it may blunt the edge of desire, and flag projects; chiefly those laid at a great distance. Bp. Burnet, Sermon, p. 181.

Nothing so flags the spirits, disorders the blood, and enfeebles the whole body of man, as intense studies. Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 29.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow. Sandys.
There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton, Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement. Shakespeare, K. John.

He hangs out as many flags as he descrieth vessels; square, if ships; if galleys, pendants. Sandys, Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps of nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags or pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
Twixt Africa and India, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton, Comus.

The French and Spaniard, when your flag appears.
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden, Æn.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements.

[flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG-BROOM. n. s. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

FLAG-OFFICER. n. s. [flag and officer.] A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Addison, Spect.

FLAG-SHIP. n. s. [flag and ship.] The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM. n. s. [flag and worm.] A grub bred in watry places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag-worm, or a green gentle. Walton, Angler.

FLA'GELET.† n. s. [flageolet, French, derived by some from the Gr. πλάγαιος, i. e. πλάγιος, oblique, and αὐλός, a pipe or flute; by others from the Lat. flagellum, a little branch or twig. V. Roquefort, Gloss. et Morin, Dict. Etym. Our own word is sometimes written flageolet.] A small flute; a small instrument of wind musick.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. More, Divine Dialogues.

FLA'GELLANTS.* n. s. pl. [from flagello, Lat. to whip.] A sect so called; of which a history has been published. Lat. Flagellantes. "There was in the time of Gregory the 10th about 1275, as our histories tell us, a brood of mad hereticks which arose in the church, called Flagellantes, the whippers, which went about through France and Italy lashing themselves to blood." Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 240.

To FLA'GELLATE.* v. a. [Lat. flagello.] To whip or scourge. Cockeram.

FLAGELLA'TION.† n. s. [flagellation, old Fr.] The use of the scourge.

He underwent those previous pains which customarily antecede that suffering, as flagellation and bearing of the cross. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth, Dispensary.

FLA'GGINESS.† n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension. Sherwood.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Spenser, F. Q.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden, Virg.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.]

1. Wicked; villanous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed; but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Esrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed.

Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times.

Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great.

Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from flagitious.] Wickedness; villany.

A and others would intentionally avoid all acts of flagitiousness and villany. The Student, Def. of Relig. (1750,) i. 176.

FLAGON.† n. s. [flaccid, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; flasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish. After all these citations, from the Welsh to the Spanish, by Dr. Johnson; we must rather agree with Upton and Ainsworth, who, derive the Latin lagena, a flagon, from λάγνος, Gr. a kind of cup, and a measure; which is from the Heb. lag; whence our word, prefixing the f or digamma.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Did they coin pispots, bowls, and flagons

Int' officers of horse and dragoons?

Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him of his drink. Dryden, Juv.

FLAGRANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. flagrance; "flagrance d'un delict, plain apparence of an offence," Cotgrave.] Notoriousness; glaring offence.

They bring to him a woman taken in the flagrance of her adultery. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

FLAGRANCY.† n. s. [flagrantia, Latin.]

1. Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Notoriousness; glaring impudence.

In some places they will assemble diverse of their fairest curtesans, to draw the modest beauty of a virgin out of the flagrancy of harlots. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

FLAGRANT.† adj. [flagrant, old Fr. flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blows in the setting sun.

Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back.

Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice. "Prendre au faict flagrant," Cotgrave.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But till the proofs are clear the stroke delay.

Smith.

FLAGRANTLY.* adv. [from flagrant.]

1. Ardently; eagerly.

2. Notoriously.

An epigram of four lines [is] a species of wit as flagrantly unsuitable to the dignity, and as foreign to the nature of the lyric, as it is of the epic muse. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

TO FLAGRATE.* v. a. [Lat. flagro.] To burn; to injure by fire.

This lamp stands on the foot of an eagle or hawk, thereby, says Kircher, to represent how Typhon's destructive and flagrating power, lying hid in the sun, was made more temperate. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705,) p. 336.

FLAGRATION.† n. s. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

Dict.

See! in this glad farwel he doth appear,
Stuck with the constellations of his sphere,
Fearing we numun'd fear'd no flagration,
Hath curled all his fires in this one One.

Lovelace, Luc. Posth. (1659,) p. 72.

FLAGSTAFF. n. s. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,

And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL.† n. s. [flagellum, Latin; flegel, German, Dr. Johnson says. It is more directly the old French flail, or flaieil, "fléau à battre le bled." V. Roq. Gloss.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thresher.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail bath thresh'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end.

Milton, L'All.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,

Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.

Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Larcker.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail.

Swift.

FLAKE.† n. s. [Sw. flake; Icel. flak, a part separated from the rest, from flaka, to divide; placeu, Sax. flakes of snow; flocke, Germ. a flake; flocco, Ital. floccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flaming in his beard,

Him all amazed, and almost made afraid.

Spenser, F. Q.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scum rising up. Addison on Italy.

FLA

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.
The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Moron.

To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope, Odys.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminæ; to part in loose bodies.

FLA'KY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain. Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

FLAM.† n. s. [A cant word of no certain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably the Icel. flim, a mocking. Our old poets Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher use it evidently in the sense of a freak or whim. Sherwood calls flam "a flimflam tale." See FLIMFLAM.]

1. A freak; a whim; a fancy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Hard trifles, anagrams,
Or eteosticks, or your finer flams
Of eggs, and halberts, cradles and a hearse,
A pair of scissars, and a comb in verse! B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Thou hast more of These flams in thee, these musty doubts. Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

She sings admirably;
But still when any hope was, 'tis her trick
To minister enough of those, then presently
With some new flam or other, nothing to the matter,
And such a frown, as would sink all before her,
She takes her chamber. Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

2. A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and augury. Hudibras.
Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.
What are most of the histories of the world but lies?
Lies immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flammi'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.
God is not to be flammed off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South.

FLAMBEAU. n. s. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.
As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison, Guardian.

FLAME.† n. s. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French;
flum, old Cornish, old Fr. and Celt.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

FLA

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.
Newton, Opticks.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest flame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is exspect,
Lofly and bold, but negligently drest. Walker.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakspeare.
Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong flaming through the ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. I.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

Lascivious fires, should such flame in you,
As I must ne'er believe. Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

To FLAME.* v. a. To inflame; to excite; to animate.

Much was he moved at that rueful sight;
And, flam'd with zeal of vengeance inwardly,
He ask'd who had that dame so foully dight. Spenser, F. Q. v. i. 14.

And since their courage is so nobly flam'd,
This morning we'll behold the champions
Within the list. Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

FLA'MECOLOUR.* n. s. [flame and colour.] The colour of flame.

The first was Splendour in a robe of flamecolour.
Changing it from a red-rose crimson to flamecolour.
Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 289.

FLA'MECOLOUR'D. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.
August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and choleric aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLA'MEYED.* adj. [flame and eye.] Having eyes like flames. A fine epithet in the following fine lines.

Nor sea, nor shade, nor shield, nor rock, nor cave,
Nor silent deserts, nor the sullen grave,
Where flame-ey'd Fury means to smite, can save.
Quarles, Emblems.

FLA'MELESS.* adj. [flame and less.] Without flame; without incense.

FLA

Both king, and priest, obnoxious to his hate,
Deserts his sanctuary, and forsakes
His flameless altar. Sandys, Lament. p. 4.

FLAMEN.† n. s. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

The heathen Romans had their flamens, and archflamens; the Britons and Gauls their druids.

Featley, Dippers Dipt. p. 130.

A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood. Pope.

FLA'MING.* n. s. [from flame.] The act of bursting out in flames.

Which honour I to fiery flaxies compare;
For when they flash and flourish most of all,
Then suddenly their flamings quenched are.

Mir. for Mag. p. 220.

FLA'MINGLY.* adv. [from flaming.] Radiantly; most brightly. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FLAM'NGO.* n. s. The name of a very remarkable and beautiful bird, common in many parts of America, and seen at times in other parts of the world.

Here [at the Mauritius island] are also ayeries of hawks, and sundry other birds; as goshawks, hobbies, passo-flamingoes, geese. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

FLAM'NICAL.* adj. [from flaman, Lat.] Belonging to the Roman priest.

Superstitious copes, and flaminical vestures.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. ii. 2.

FLAMMA'TION. n. s. [flammatio, Latin.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FLAMMAB'ILITY. n. s. [flamma, Latin.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torrifed, that is, the oily, fat and unctious parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLA'MMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body. Brown.

FLA'MY.† adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Flamecoloured.

A flamy redness will overspread the heavens.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 53.

FLANG.* old pret. of the verb fling. See TO FLING.
On every side full fast we flang the Frenchmen downe.

Mir. for Mag. p. 489.

FLANK.† n. s. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from laxiv; more probably from latus, Latin. So far Dr. Johnson. Our word, which is also the Germ. flanke, is, however, the Teut. lancke, the same, with the addition of f. In this Kilian and Wachter agree.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.

Peacham.

FLA

Do not those goodly flanks and briskets march up in your stately chargers? Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks. Job, xv. 27.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the gallics that lay at sea in flank. Bacon, War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton, P. L.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

TO FLANK.† v. a. [Fr. flanquer.]

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden, Æn.

We cannot talk in rank and file, and flank and rear our discourses with military allusions.

Scott, Sermon before the Artillery Comp. (1680,) Works, ii. 24.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLA'NKER.† n. s. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers. Fairfax.

In this disorder, a flanker by mischance was blown up; but the siege continued. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 109.

TO FLA'NKER.† v. a. [flanquer, French.]

1. To defend by lateral fortifications.

The city is compassed with a thick wall, flanked, and moated about. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

The castle was neither so weakly manned, nor flanked, as they were made to believe. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 277.

2. To attack sideways.

Where sharp winds do rather flanker, than blow fully opposite upon, our plantations, they thrive best. Evelyn, i. iii. § 8.

FLA'NNEL. n. s. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.]

A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welsh flannel.

Shakspeare.

FLAP.† n. s. [flappe, Teut. a flyflap; originally, any thing pendulous. See FLABBY.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp, Surgery.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure.

Parry's Dict.

FLA

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.
A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.
Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.
2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.
With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.
Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flapp'd his wing. Tickell.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.
'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.
The dirc flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden, Æn.
2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.
When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay, Trivia.

FLA'PDRAGON. † n. s. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire. The word is sometimes called snappdragon, or slapdragon.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them. Gallants thus drank the healths of their mistresses.
2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.
He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.
Flapdragons, healths, whiffs, and all such swaggering humours. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

To FLARE. v. a. [from floderen, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.
Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone

FLA

Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

2. To glitter offensively.
When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves, Milton, Il Pens.
3. To be in too much light.
I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

4. To flatter with a splendid show.
She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare.

FLASH. † n. s. [φάλαξ, Gr. a flame, Minshew; to which Dr. Johnson accedes. Skinner offers blaze as the etymology. Our word seems to have some connection with the Icel. flas, a tumbling down from a high place; as, where it means a body of water driven by violence.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.
When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
The other out of smok brings glorious light. Roscommon.
And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryden, Æn.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.
The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

5. Any little pool. North. Pegge.

To FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.
This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.
By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.
They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Edmon on the Classics.

To FLASH. † v. a.

1. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flask'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Spenser, F. Q.
If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To trick up in a showy manner. See FLASHY.

Oft have I season'd savoury periods
With sugred words, to delude Gustus' taste;
And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase
With smelling flowers of vernant rhetoric,
Limning and flashing it with various dyes,
To draw proud Visus to me by the eyes.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1637) i. 1.

FLA

FLA'SHER.† n. s. [from flash.]

1. A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Dict.
2. A rower; a flasher, or a dasher of water. [Fr. gâscheur.] Cotgrave.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY.† adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.
Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Ded.
When they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scannell pipes of wretched straw. Milton, Lycidas.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;
Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden, Pers.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Ess.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish, or flashy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Made of fine twigs, entrail'd curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket. Spenser, Prothalamion.

FLAT.† adj. [flatr, Icel. flad, Danish; plat, Fr. plat, Gr.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.
Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton, Comus.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.
In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of boscage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.
Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abasht. Milton, P. L.

4. Level with the ground.
In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton, P. R.
That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.
The wood born people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. Spenser, F. Q.

FLA

That lamentable wound,
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton, P. L.

The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.
Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton, S. A.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.
How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unsavoury. Atterbury, Serm.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discrete stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser on Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton, P. L.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
F frailty gets pardon by submissiveness:

But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
With his meer clod of earth the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray on the Creation.

FLAT.† n. s.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board, and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great mixture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton, Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton, P. L.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste;
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'urburs your officers. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shakespeare, K. John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh, Ess.

Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton on Education.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills. Bentley, Sermon.

8. [In musick.] A kind of additional or half note, contrived, together with sharps, to remedy the defects of musical instruments; which, taking the name of the natural note next above it, and having a distinctive mark, is called a flat. Thus D flat signifies a semitone below D natural.

To FLAT.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flattened. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unprepared and confused variety to distract and lose it. K. Charles.
It mortifies the body, and flats the pleasure of the senses.

Glanville, Sermon, p. 279.

To FLAT. v. n. To grow flat: opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

FLAT-BOTTOMED.* adj. [flat and bottom.]

1. Having a flat bottom, applied to boats.

We saw great vessels with masts and sails, flat-bottomed,— keeping in sight of land. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 189.

2. [In fortification.] A moat which has no sloping, its corners being somewhat rounded. Chambers.

FLA'TIVE.* adj. [Lat. flatus.] Producing wind; flatulent.

• Eat not too many of those apples; they be very flative.

Brewer, Com. of Linguæ, (1657.)

FLA'TLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?

— An it had not fallen flatlong. Shakespeare, Tempest.

FLA'TLY. adv. [from flat.]

1. Horizontally; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.

3. Without spirit; dully; frigidly.

4. Peremptorily; downright.

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid. Sidney.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.

Unjust, thou say'st,

Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton, P. L.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, seclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS.† n. s. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.

The flatness of the bottom [of the ark.]

Biblioth. Bibl. (Os. 1720.) i. 234.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the corner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father:

Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding

His daughter's trial! that he did but see

The flatness of my misery. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope, Pref. to Homer.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLATNOSED.* adj. [flat and nose.] Having a flat nose; camous.

If she be flat-nosed, she is lovely!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 526.

What vitions clerk would fear to dwell there, where all the crows are white, be they never so black; and where flat-nosed people are the most comely? Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 226.

To FLATTEN.† v. a. [flattir, French; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

FLA

As if for that time their round bodies flatten'd were.
Donne, Poems, p. 298.

 If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.

To FLATTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.

FLATTEN. n. s. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLATTEN. v. a. [flater, French; fladra, Iceland; flatter, to fawn; flate, a woman who flatters; flatsen, Teut. to flatter, and also flayden.]

1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
 He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

His nature is too noble for the world;
 He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
 Or Jove for's power to thunder; His heart's his mouth;
 What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.
 He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet.

Prov. xxix. 5.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful.

Psalms xxxvi. 2.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions.

Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend.

Pope.

I scorn to flatter you or any man.

Newton, Ded. to Milton's Works.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
 Provoke our censure.

Young.

3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts make a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. To raise false hopes.

Who always vacant, always amiable,
 Hopes thee, of flattering gales Unmindful.

Milton, Ode of Horace.

FLATTERER. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsities.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
 He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce.

Bacon, Ess.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
 Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend. Dryden.
 After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison, Guardian.

The publick should know this; yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.

Swift.

FLATTERINGLY. adv. [from flattering.] In an artfully obsequious manner.

Flatteringly to creep, to dissemble.

Bale on the Revel. P. 1. (1550.) sign. I. iii. b.

FLA

He flatteringly encouraged him in the opinion of his own merits.
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 169.

FLATTERY. n. s. [from flatter; flaterie, French.]

False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,

And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery.

Rousse.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands.

Pope.

See how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye.

Young.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flatish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLATULENCY. n. s. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.

Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.

Glanville.

FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.

Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a turgid state again.

Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity.

Glanville, Scopsis.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works.

Dryden.

FLATULOSITY. n. s. [flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.

Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [Fr. flatueux, from flatus, Latin.]

Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesenteric veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Her mother hath of late been much troubled (and I think as much in her fancy, which is the greater cure, as in her body,) with a pain in her side, which changeth place, and therefore is sure but a flatuous infirmity.

Wotton, Rem. p. 462.

FLATUS. † n. s. [Latin.]

1. Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore dissolved by warm aromatics.

Quincy.

2. A breath; a puff.

You make the soul, as being a mere flatus, to have a more precarious subsistence even than mere matter itself.

Clarke, Lett. to Dodwell, p. 31.

FLATWISE. adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposit. Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. † v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. The word seems to be allied to the Ital.

FLA

flana, to be carried away with precipitation, to run about with uncertainty. Ainsworth, however, deduces it from the Lat. laustus, fine, costly.]

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

'Twas when young Eustace fought his battles in compliments and cringes, when his understanding waved in a flaunting feather, and his best contemplation looked no further than a new-fashioned doublet. Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus.

Here, attird beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden, Juv.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To face; to carry a pert or saucy appearance.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently vain enough to immoderate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

3. To be hung with something loose and flying.

This seems not to be proper; the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope, Ess.

FLAUNT.† n. s.

1. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how,
Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. An ostentatious display; a brag.

Dost thou come hither with thy flourishes,
Thy flaunts, and faces, to abuse men's manners?
Beaum. and Fl. False One.

FLA'VOUR.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It may be the French flair, a scent. The Welsh flair is a stink.]

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison, Spect.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so high their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous

FLA'VOURED.* adj. [from flavour.] Having a fine taste.

Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,
And flavour'd Chian wines. Dyer.

FLA'VOUS.* adj. [Lat. flavous.] Yellow.

The membrane itself is somewhat of a flavous colour, and tends more towards that of gold, than any other part whatsoever. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 219.

FLAW.† n. s. [φλάω, Gr. to break; floh, Saxon, a fragment. So far Dr. Johnson. Mr. Horne Tooke observes, that flaw is the past participle of the Sax. flean, to flay. But I may carry this etymology to a higher source. The Iceland. flagan is to divide, or break up as it were by the plow; and flag, is a part so separated or broken up. The Swedish flaga is a breach or flaw. And this may be deduced from flaa, to strip off the rind or skin. See TO FLAY. The example from Shakspeare, under Dr. Johnson's first definition of this word, certainly signifies a small broken particle. Our word was formerly written also sometimes flaugh.]

FLA

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,
Or ere I weep. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden, Pers.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,
Should gaps immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unground men to serve their own turn. Bacon, Ess.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.
Their judgements have found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison, Spect.
So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Alicebury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flo, Latin.] Obsolete.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t' expel the winter's flaw. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

What flaws and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms have been aloft these three days. Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

One kind of these storms they call a flaw, or flaugh, which is a mighty gale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working strong effects upon whatsoever it encounters in its way. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw fluid,
Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Urialus. Chapman, Iliad.

Expect rough seas, flaws, and contrary blasts. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 1.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton, P. L.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton, P. L.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw

FLA

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. Boyle on Colours.

FLAWN.† n. s. [plena, Saxon; flan, French; fladen, German.] A custard; a sort of pudding or pie baked in a dish; a cheesecake.

Fill oven full of flawns, Ginne's pass not for sleep,
To-morrow thy father his wake-day will keep. Tusser.
As flat as a flawn. Ray, Prov.

To FLAWTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin.

FLAWY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.

FLAX. n. s. [pleax, flex, Saxon; vlax, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

2. The fibres of flax cleansed and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs,
To apply to's bleeding face. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,
And turning sung. Dryden, Ovid.

FLAXCOMB. n. s. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres of flax are cleansed from the brittle parts:

FLAXDRESSER. n. s. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.

FLAXEN.† adj. [Sax. pleaxen.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron, at her nightly task,
With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread. Thomson, Wint.
The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig. Addison.

FLAXWEED. n. s. A plant.

FLAXY.* adj. [from flax.] Of a light colour; fair. The four colours—signify these four virtues. The flaxy, having whiteness, appertains to temperance, because it makes "candidam et mupdam animam."

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 16.

To FLAY.† v. a. [flan, Icelandic; flæ, Danish; vlaen, Dutch; plean, Sax. And our own word was formerly written flea, and flean. Some etymologists derive flay from the Greek φλοιω, or φλοω, to strip off the bark.]

1. To strip off the skin.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive. Raleigh.

FLE

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;
Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;
And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd
To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride. Pope, Odys.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces. Mic. iii. 3.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins. Swift.

FLAYER.† n. s. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.

FLEA. n. s. [plea, Saxon; vloye, Dutch; flæch, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handfull or twain,
To save against March, to make flea to refrain;
Where chamber is sweep'd, and wormwood is strown,
No flea for his life dare abide to be known. Tusser.

A valiant flea that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mat, where there hath been a little moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.

FLEABANE. n. s. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form; the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them. Miller.

FLEABITE.† } n. s. [flea and bite.]

FLEABITING. }

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

That which is but a fleabiting to one causeth insufferable torment to another. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 13.

What fleabittings were these in comparison of those inward torments! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

A gout, a cholick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or searing the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul. Fluorey.

The same expence that breaks one man's back, is not a flea-biting to another. L'Estrange.

FLEABITTEN.† adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

Itching, as if they were fleabitten, or stung with pismires.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 208.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the Fade
Chaos of presbyt'ry; where laymen guide,
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

FLEAK.† n. s. [from floccus, Latin. See FLAKE.]

1. A small lock, thread, or twist.

The businesses of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax. More, Ant. against Atheism.

2. [Icel. fleke.] An old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse. It is a word, according to Pegge, yet used in Yorkshire, meaning a rack for bacon.

FLEAM. n. s. [corrupted from φλεβοτομον, the instrument used in phlebotomy.] An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein; and then driven by a blow.

F L E

FLEAWORT.† n. s. [Sax pleapptc.] A plant. Miller.

To FLECK.† v. a. [fleck, German, a spot, Skinner: perhaps it is derived from fleak, or fleck, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Icelandick fleke. Such is Dr. Johnson's opinion of the etymon. But Skinner is right. The Su. Goth. fleck, is a spot; and the Dan. flek, the same. The Iceland. flecka is a spotted sheep, and a flecked cow is no uncommon phrase in Scotland.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

The grey-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And darkness flecked, like a drunkard, reels
From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Let it not see the dawning fleck the skies,
Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise.

Sandys.

Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,
Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare. Congreve, Juv.
Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain. Dryden.

To FLECKER.† v. a. To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red wheels. This is Dr. Johnson's definition, which he illustrates by the example from Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet, where the true word is flecked. It is probable that we have flecker in our old language. The Danes have the same verb flekker, to stain, to spot.

FLECTION.* n. s. [Lat. flectio.] The act or power of bending or turning. See FLEXION.

The one gives flection and extension with strength.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 60.

FLECTOR.* n. s. [from flecto, Lat.] A name given to the muscles, more frequently called flexors. See FLEXOR.

Their origination may be either from the back, inwardly, as the chief flector, the psoas, &c. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 65.

FLED. The preterite and participle, not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

Truth is fled far away, and leasing is hard at hand. 2 Esdr. xiv. 18.

In vain for life he to the altar fled;
Ambition and revenge have certain speed. Prior.

FLEDGE.† adj. [flederen, to fly, Dutch; from the Su. Goth. flyga.] Full feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

We did find,

The shells of fledge souls left behind. Herbert.

A stripling divine or two of those newly fledge probationers. Milton, Colasterion.

His locks behind,

Illustrious on his shoulders fledge with wings,
Lay waving round. Milton, P. L.

To FLEDGE.† v. a. [from the adjective,] To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves. L'Estrange, Fables.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones till they be fledged, and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence. Ray on the Creation.

The sandals of celestial mould,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,
Surround her feet. Pope, Odys.

To FLEE.† v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, fleogan, flew, is to move with wings, and flee, flean, to run away. They are now confounded. The distinction, however, ought to be observed. Our translation of the Bible, as Lowth has noticed, is not quite free from the confusion. It has flee, for to move with wings, in perhaps seven or eight places out of a great number; but never fly for to run away.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold this city is near to flee unto.

Gen. xix. 20.

Macduff is fled to England.

Shakspeare.

Were men so dull they could not see

That Lyce painted; should they flee

Like simple birds, into a net,

So grossly woven and ill set?

Waller.

None of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to but him. Tillotson.

FLEECE.† n. s. [fly], flece, Saxon; vleese, Dutch; from the Lat. vellus, which is derived by some from vello, to pluck; wool, it is said, being pulled from the animal, before shearing was adopted; by others, from velare, to clothe, the fleece being the sheep's clothing.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase

Both of their lambs, and of their woolly fleece.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

So many days my ewes have been with young,

So many months ere I shall shear the fleece.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I am shepherd to another man,

And do not shear the fleece that I graze.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Sailors have used every night to hang *fleece*s of wool on the sides of their ships towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the *fleece*s. Swift.

To FLEECE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people. Addison.

3. To whiten; to spread over as with wool.

Mean time, light shadowing all, a sober calm,

*Fleece*s unbounded ether. Thomson, Autumn.

FLEECED. adj. [from fleece.] Having *fleece*s of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich *fleece*d flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that with the terror of the shock

Astonied both stand senseless as a block. Spenser, F. Q.

FLEECER.* n. s. [from fleece.] One who strips or plunders.

Not *fleece*rs, but feeders; not butchers, but shopherds.

Huntley, (i. e. Prymme,) Breviate of the Prel. (1637,) p. 262.

FLEECY.† adj. [from fleece.]

1. Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the *fleece*y wealth

That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought

To this my errand.

Milton, Comus.

From eastern point

Of Libra, to the *fleece*y star, that bears

Andromeda far off Atlantick seas.

Milton, P. L.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;

Let *fleece*y flocks her rising hills adorn.

Prior.

The good shepherd tends his *fleece*y care,

Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;

Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs.

Pope.

2. Of a light colour; pale.

F L E

The moon

Peeps through the chambers of the fleecy east, Enlighten'd by degrees. Thomson, Spring.

3. Having the appearance of fleeces of wool.

Thick clouds ascend, in whose capacious womb
A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd;
Heavy they roll their fleecy world along. Thomson, Winter.

To FLEER.† v. n. [pleapdian, to trifle, Saxon; fleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer. So far Dr. Johnson. It may be rather from the Iceland. flyra, to laugh, to grin. Flying is still our own word, in the north of England, for sneering or grinning.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fleering tell-tale. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
Dares the slave

Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To fleer and scorn at our solemnity! Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
Do I, like the female tribe,
Think it well to fleer and gibe? Swift.

2. To leer; to grin with an air of civility.
How popular and courteous; how they grin and fleer upon every man they meet! Burton on Melancholy.

Those,
With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and fleer,
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a moth. B. Jonson, For.

To FLEER.* v. a. To mock; to flout.
I was fain to drive him like a sheep before me;
I blush to think how people fleer'd and scorn'd me.
Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

FLEER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Mockery expressed either in words or looks.

Encave yourself,
And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face, Shakespeare, Othello.

2. A deceitful grin of civility.
He shall generally spy such false lines, and such a sly treacherous fleer upon the face of deceivers, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to betray him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him. South.

FLE'ERER.† n. s. [from fleer.] A mocker; a fawner.
Dict.

Democritus, thou ancient fleerer.
Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

FLEET. FLEOT. FLOT. Are all derived from the Saxon pleot, which signifies a bay or gulph.
Gibson's Camden.

FLEET.† n. s. [plota, Saxon, from pleotan, to float, to swim on the waves; plier, a ship. The old French language also has flete for a boat; which Roquefort deduces from the Gr. πλίου, to navigate.]
A company of ships; a navy.

Our pray'rs are heard; our master's fleet shall go
As far as winds can bear, or waters flow. Prior.

FLEET. n. s. [pleot, Saxon, an estuary, or arm of the sea.] A creek; an inlet of water. A provincial word, from which the Fleet-prison and Fleet-street are named.

They have a very good way in Essex of draining of lands that have land-floods or fleets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLEET.† adj. [fiotr, Icelandic, from flyta, to hasten, to move quickly.]

1. Swift of pace; quick; nimble; active.
Upon that shore he spied Atin stand;
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phœdria's fleet bark. Spenser, F.Q.

F L E

I take him for the better dog:

—Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such. Shakespeare.
He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England.
Clarendon.

His fear was greater than his haste;
For fear, though fleeter than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind. Hudibras.

So fierce they drove, their coursers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet. Dryden.

He told us, that the welkin would be clear
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air. Gay.

2. [In the husbandry of some provinces.] Light;
superficially fruitful.

Marl cope-ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay, unless where it is very fleet for pasture. Mortimer.

3. Skimming the surface. Cant word.
Those lands must be plowed fleet. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To FLEET.† v. n. [pleotan, Saxon; fiota, Icel.
flyta, Su. Goth.]

1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair! Shakespeare.
A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet. Shakespeare.

2. To be in a transient state; the same with flit,
Dr. Johnson says. It is rather the same with float, to skim along. Fleet is our old verb for float. See the next definition, overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear-bought with lasting woes! Milton, P. L.

While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:

That powerful noise
Calls my fleeting soul away. Waller.

As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their fleeting forms scarce sooner found than lost. Prior.

3. "To fleet about the water;" to float. Barret.
Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood on Adrian gulf doth fleet.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 14.

Our sever'd navy too
Have knit again, and fleet. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To FLEET.† v. a.

1. To skim the water. Dr. Johnson here cites, from Spenser, the example which I have placed under the third definition of the verb neuter; where, in order to make the verb active, he unjustifiably reads "an Adrian gulf," and destroys entirely the sense of the poet.

2. To live merrily, or pass time away lightly.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet
the time carelessly as they did in the golden age. Shakespeare.

3. [In the country.] To skim milk; to take off the cream: whence the word fleeting dish. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this expression; which, however, is very old. "Flet of mylke, or other lyk, despumatio." Prompt. Parv. plet, Sax.
flos lactis. Lye.

He fleeted off the cream of the king's manors.
Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 51.

FLEETFOOT.* adj. [fleet and foot.] Swift of foot.
Like a wild bird, being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleetfoot roe that's tir'd with chasing.
Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

FLEETINGDISH. n. s. [from fleet and dish.] A skimming bowl.

FLEETLY. adv. [from fleet.] Swiftly; nimbly; with swift pace.

FLE'ETNESS.† n. s. [from fleet.] Swiftness of course; nimbleness; celerity; velocity; speed; quickness.
The fleetness of time. Ld. Chesterfield.

FLEGM.* See PHLEGM.

FLE'MING.* n. s. [Sax. flyming, flyma, a wanderer, an exile; whence, according to Laurence Noel, the Flemings are named; by reason that their country, being wild and strong, was a fit receptacle for outlaws; and so was first inhabited. But this may be doubted. Inundation might occasion them to be wanderers or exiles.] A native or inhabitant of the Low Countries.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welshman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aquavita bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself.
Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

FLE'MISH.* adj. Relating to the character or history of the Flemings.

What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked out of my conversation.

Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

FLESH.† n. s. [flærc, plerc, Sax. flesh, Icel. fleisch, Germ. fleisch, Dut. leik, M. Goth. lik, Su. Goth. V. Wachter, Gloss.]

1. The body distinguished from the soul.

As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
 Were brass impregnable. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

A disease that's in my flesh,
 Which I must needs call mine. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye
 To view the beams of thine own form divine,
 Know, that thou canst know nothing perfectly,
 While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine. Davies.

2. The muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons.

A spirit hath not flesh and bones. St. Luke, xxiv. 39.

3. Animal food distinguished from vegetable.

Flesh should be forborne as long as he can coats, or at least till he is two or three years old. Locke.

Flesh, without being qualified with acids, is too alkaliescent a diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Acidity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. The body of beasts or birds used in food, distinct from fishes.

There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We mortify ourselves with fish; and think we fare coarsely, if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown.

5. Animal nature.

The end of all flesh is come before me. Gen. vi. 13.

6. Carnality; corporal appetites.

Narpe not religion; for thou lov'st the flesh. Shakespeare.
 Fasting serves to mortify the flesh, and subdue the lusts thereof. Smalridge, Serm.

7. A carnal state; worldly disposition: in theology.

They that are in the flesh cannot please God. Rom. viii. 8.
 The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. Gal. v. 16.

8. Near relation: a scriptural use.

Let not our hand be upon him; for he is our flesh. Genesis, xxxvii. 27.

When thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. Leviticus, lviii. 7.

9. The outward or literal sense. The Orientals termed the immediate or literal signification of any precept or type the flesh, and the remote or typical meaning the spirit. This is frequent in St. Paul.

Ye judge after the flesh. St. John, viii. 15.

To FLESH.† v. a.

1. To initiate: from the sportsman's practice of feeding his hawks and dogs with the first game that they take, or training them to pursuit by giving them the flesh of animals.

Full bravely hast thou flesh'd

Thy maiden sword. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Every puny swordsman will think him a good tame quarry to enter and flesh himself upon. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. To harden: to establish in any practice, as dogs by often feeding on any thing.

These princes finding them so flesh'd in cruelty, as not to be reclaimed, secretly undertook the matter alone. Sidney.

The women ran all away, saving only one, who was so flesh'd in malice, that neither during nor after the fight she gave any truce to her cruelty. Sidney.

His whole troops

Exceed not twenty thousand, but old soldiers flesh'd in the spoils of Germany and France. Beaum. and Fl. False One.

A flesh'd ruffian,
 That hath so often taken the strappado,
 That 'tis to him but as a lofty trick
 Is to a tumbler. Beaum. and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

He that is most flesh'd in sin, commits it not without some remorse. Hales, Rem. p. 165.

3 To glut; to satiate.

Harry from curb'd licence plucks
 The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog
 Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
 He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour. Shakespeare.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
 And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
 That hunted us in our familiar paths. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The tyrant Ottoman spreads his victorious arms, and is flesh'd in triumphs. Glanville, Serm. p. 276.

FLE'SHBROTH. n. s. [flesh and broth.] Broth made by decocting flesh.

Her leg being emaciated, I advised bathing it with flesh-broth, wherein had been decocted emollient herbs. Wiscman.

FLE'SHBRUSH.* n. s. [flesh and brush.] A brush to rub the flesh with.

The fleshbrush is an exercise extremely useful for promoting a full and free perspiration and circulation. Cheyne.

FLE'SHCOLOUR. n. s. [flesh and colour.] The colour of flesh.

A complication of ideas together makes up the single complex idea, which he calls man, whereof white or fleshcolour in England is one. Locke.

A loose earth of a pale fleshcolour, that is, white with a blush of red, is found in a mountain in Cumberland. Woodward.

FLE'SHDIET.* n. s. [flesh and diet.] Food consisting of flesh.

An original grant to mankind of a liberty of a flesh-diet.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

FLE'SHED.* adj. [from flesh.] Fat; having abundance of flesh.

Venison —

Very well flesh'd, and excellent fat.

Old Song, The King and Miller of Mansfield.

FLE'SHFLY. n. s. [flesh and fly.] A fly that feeds upon flesh, and deposits her eggs in it.

I would no more endure

This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
 The fleshfly blow my mouth. Shakespeare, Tempest.

It is a wonderful thing in fleshflies, that a fly-maggot in five days' space after it is hatched, arrives at its full growth and perfect magnitude. Ray on the Creation.

FLE'SHFUL.* adj. [flesh and full.] Plump; fat. Lat. carnosus. Hufoet.

When fleshless cadavers abate not the exorbitances of the flesh.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 10.

FLESHLINESS.† n. s. [Sax. pleſcligneſſe.]

1. Abundance of flesh, called carnosity. Huloet,

2. Carnal passions or appetites.

When strong passions or weak fleshliness
Would from the right way seek to draw him wide,
He would, through temperance and steadfastness,
Teach him the weak to strengthen, and the strong suppress.

Spenser, F. Q.

Corrupt manners in living, breed false judgement in doctrine: sin and fleshliness bring forth sects and heresies. Ascham.

FLESHLING.* [from flesh.] Like worldling from world.] A mortal set wholly upon the carnal state. Obsolete.

Their entente was to set forthe the justice of God, which is to reward the spiritual, his elects, with the blessings promised; and the fleshlynges, the reprobate, with the plagues thretned.

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546) sign. I. 5.

FLESHLY.† adj. [Sax. pleſchlic.]

1. Corporeal.

Nothing resembles death so much as sleep;
Yet then our minds themselves from slumber keep,
When from their fleshly bondage they are free. Denham.

2. Carnal; lascivious.

Belial, the dissolutes spirit that fell,
The sensualest; and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest incubus. Milton, P. R.

3. Animal; not vegetable.

'Tis then for nought that mother earth provides
The stores of all she shows, and all she hides,
If men with fleshly morsels must be fed,
And chaw with bloody teeth the breathing bread. Dryden.

4. Human; not celestial; not spiritual.

Else, never could the force of fleshly arm
Ne molten metal in his flesh embue.

Spenser, F. Q.

Th' eternal Lord in fleshly shrine
Enwombed was, from wretched Adam's line,
To purge away the guilt of sinful crime.

Spenser, F. Q.

To set forth the praises of the idols; and to magnify a fleshly king.

Ezher, xiv. 10.

Much ostentation vain of fleshly arm
And fragile arms, much instrument of war —
Before mine eyes thou hast set. Milton, P. R.

5. Fat; full of flesh.

Huloet.

FLESHMEAT.† n. s. [Sax. pleſcmet.] Animal food; the flesh of animals prepared for food.

The most convenient diet is that of fleshmeats.
In this prodigious plenty of cattle and dearth of human creatures, fleshmeat is monstrously dear.

Floyer.

Swift.

FLESHMENT. n. s. [from flesh.] Eagerness gained by a successful initiation.

[He] got praises of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdued;
And in the fleshment of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FLESHMONGER.† n. s. [Sax. pleſcmangeſe.] One who deals in flesh; a pimp.

Was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him?

With ears that sweep away the morning dew.

Shakespeare.

FLEXANIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind.

That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator. Howell.

FLEXIBILITY. n. s. [flexibilité, Fr. from flexible.]

1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.

Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours?

Newton, Opticks.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specifick gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure.

Woodward.

2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.

Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meanness than by self-love.

Hammond.

F L E

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Lat. flexible, Fr.]

1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.

When splitting winds
Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Take a stock-gillyflower, tie it upon a stick, put them both into a glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you shall find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.

Bacon.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people.

Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Under whose care soever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education.

Locke.

4. That may be accommodated to various forms and purposes.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose.

Rogers.

FLEXIBLENESS. n. s. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy.

I will rather choose to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embossed flexibility shall be forced to bend.

King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.

3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable.

Locke.

FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Lat.]. Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexile wave

Obeys the blast; the aerial tumult swells.

Thomson, Summer.

FLEXION. n. s. [flexio, Lat.]

1. The act of bending.

To sit doth not [here] signify any peculiar inclination or flexion, any determinate location or position of the body, but to be in heaven with permanence of habitation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. A turn towards any part or quarter.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLEXOR. n. s. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back.

Arbutnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Lat.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible.

Digby on the Soul.

2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLEXURE. n. s. [flexura, Lat.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward.

Ray.

2. The act of bending.

F L I

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins.

Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bends?

Shakespeare, Ham. V.

FLICK.* See FLITCH.

To FLICKER. † v. n. [fligheren, Dutch; plieccen, Saxon; flickern, Germ. flectra, Su. Goth. This is one of our oldest verbs; Chaucer uses it for flutter.]

1. To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,

On flickering Phoebus' front.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid of night,

And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,

Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;

The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,

And flick ring on her nest, made short essays to sing.

Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,

And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;

Then, flickering to his pallid lips, she strove

To print a kiss, the last essay of love.

Dryden.

2. To fluctuate; to move with uncertain and hasty motion.

An old dizard, that hath one foot in his grave, shall flicker after a young lusty wench that is flithe and bonny.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 629.

* Their soft maiden voice, and flickering eye.

Niccols, The Cuckoo, (1607.) p. 10.

Rising o'er the flickering wave.

Dyer, Fleece, B. 4.

FLICKERMOUSE.  n. s.* [flicker and mouse.] A bat.

See FLINDERMOUSE.

Come, I will see the flickermouse.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

FLIER. n. s. [from fly.] See FLYER.

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,

Not for the fliers.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them.

King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet,

Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't.

Swift.

FLIGHT. † n. s. [Sax. fliht.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,

That strength he wasted in ignoble flight.

Danham.

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,

And claims the prize because he best did run.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

As eager of the chace, the maid

Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;

Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.

Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,

That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly

Up to the clouds and thence with pinions light

To mount aloft unto the crystal sky.

Spenser, Musoposmos.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;

And on her wicker wings, sublime through night

She to the Latian palace took her flight.

Dryden, En.

Winds that tempests brew,

When through Arabian groves they take their flight,

Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spits.

Dryden.

3. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloyster'd flight.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Ed. v. 6.

Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,

And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden, Æn.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels sing thee to thy rest! Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon, New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,

Command a table in this wilderness;

And call swift flights of angels ministrant,

Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton, P. R.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged, at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,

Full threescore Scots they slew. Chevy Chase.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; sally of the soul.

Old Piudar's flights by him are reacht,

When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.

He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;

Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,

When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way. Shakespeare.

11. A particular kind of arrow.

Here be of all sorts; flights, rovers, and butshafts,

B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.

A flight drawn home,

A round stone from a sling. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

12. An ancient sport of shooting with arrows, called roving.

He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

FLIGHT-SHOT.* n. s. The length which an arrow may fly, when shot from a bow. See the 11th sense of FLIGHT.

The passage into it at full sea is a flight-shot over.

Leland, Itinerary.

It being from the park about two flight-shots over.

Enterl. at Casa. House, (1613.)

Jack was already gone a flight-shot beyond his patience.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, §. 6.

FLIGHTED.* adj. [from flight.] Taking flight; flying. This is a word used by Milton in the manuscript of his mask of Comus, but not admitted by him into the published copies of it. Bishop Newton preferred it to the printed word frighted; but the context requires the more rational and easy reading of the latter, which the poet evidently intended by permitting its continuance in three editions during his life-time.

The drowsy flighted steeds,

That draw the litter of close-curtain'd Sleep. Com. ver. 553.

FLIGHTINESS.* n. s. [from flighty.] Wildness; irregularity of conduct. Modern.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,

Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMFLAM.* n. s. [flim, Icel.] A word, of elder times, for a freak, a whim, a trick, a cheat, a petty fiction. See FLAM.

This is a pretty flimflam. Beaum. and Fl. Little Fr. Lawyer.

Here are recounted a thousand flimflams, as impertinent as necessary to the understanding of this famous history.

Contin. of Shelton's Don Quix. ch. 24.

FLIMSYNESS.* n. s. [from flimsy.] Easy texture.

There is a certain flimsiness in poetry, that seems expedient in a song. Shenstone.

FLIMSY.† adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers, Dr. Johnson says. May it not be a corruption of flim, which is a thin covering or skin?]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines.

Pope.

Walsh was in general a flimsy and frigid writer.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To FLINCH.† v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.

To this etymology Dr. Johnson accedes. It may more easily be deduced from the Sax. flon, to avoid any thing.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South, Serm.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.

If I brake time, or flinch in property

Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakespeare.

FLINCHER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

But make this good upon us as you have promis'd,

You shall not find us flinchers. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

After that sharp reprehension of flinchers from the faith, he returns to encourage and corroborate the church in Smyrna.

Morc, on the Sev. Churches, p. 51.

FLINDERMOUSE.* n. s. [a corruption of flichermouse or flittermouse.] A bat.

Large wings on him did grow,

Fram'd like the wings of flindermouse.

Googe, Zodiack of Life, (1565.) p. 9.

The other—had wings like a bat or flindermouse.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 9. b.

To FLING.† v. a. preter. flung; part. flung or flog.

[from fligo, Latin, Skinner; according to others, from flying; so to fling is to set flying. Thus far Dr. Johnson. Serenius mentions the Sn. flenga, jacere, i. e. to cast or throw, as the parent of our word; flenga, Icel. the same. The Goth. flinga, is to strike.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

- The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakspeare, Coriol.
- 'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.
2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd
Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.
3. To scatter.
West winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn allies fling
Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton, Comus.
Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings. Pope.
4. To drive by violence.
A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.
5. To move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison, Spect.
6. To cast: in an ill sense.
I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire. Addison, Cato.
7. To force into another condition, properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.
8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.
10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison, Spect.
- To FLING.† v. n.
1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
Fearing lest, fatted at too much ease, he [the horse] wax headstrong, and fall to kicking and flinging, instead of carrying his rider well and quietly.
Harnar, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1587), p. 379.
Neither fares it otherwise than with some wild colt, which,
at the first taking up, flings and plunges, and will stand no ground. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 86.
- The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them
wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.
2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous:
from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakspeare.
- FLING.† n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
Else would I have a fling at Winchester.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Swift.
- FLINGER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws. Sherwood.
2. He who jeers.
- FLINT. n. s. [flint, Saxon.]
1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South, Serm.
Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbour'g wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.
2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
- FLINTHEART.* } adj. [flint and heart.] Having a FLINTHEARTED. } hard heart; cruel.
Under the conduct of great Soliman,
Have I been chief commander of an host,
And put the flint-heart Persians to the sword.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)
Oh pity, gan she cry, flint-hearted boy.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.
- FLINTY.† adj. [from flint.]
1. Made of flint; strong.
He made him to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock. Deut. xxxii. 13.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakspeare, Othello.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.
2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
Gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakspeare, All's Well.
Flinty hearts of men turned into flesh.
Bp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.
- FLIP. n. s. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The tarpawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.
- FLIPPANCY.* n. s. [from flippant.] Pertness; brisk folly.
- FLIPPANT.† adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap. Dr. Johnson. — Yet Dr. Johnson cites the authority of Addison, to which I may add the elder and more weighty usage of the word by Barrow.]
1. Nimble; movable. It is used only of the act of speech.
It becometh good men, in such cases, to be brisk and gay in their looks, flippant and free in their speech.
Barrow, Serm. on Gunpowder Treason.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.
2. Pert; petulant; waggish.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.

FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.

To FLIRT.† v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound, and Dr. Johnson offers no other etymological remark. It is probably from the Sax. pleapdian, to trifle, please, trifles. Or it may be formed from fleer. See To FLEER. This might seem to belong exclusively to the verb neuter, if we had not also flirt as a verb active in the sense of jeer; of which sense, however, Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.]

1. To throw any thing with a quick elastic motion.

*Dick the scavenger
Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face.* Swift.

2. To throw out words carelessly; to blurt.
Our cousin Archy hath more privilege than any; for he often goes with his fool's coat where the Infanta is with her ladies, and flirts out what he lists. Howell, Lett. i. iii. 18.

3. To move with quickness.
Permit some happier man
To kiss your hand, or flirt your fan. Dorset.

4. To jeer; to treat with scoffs.
I am asham'd, I'm scorn'd, I'm flirted. Beaum. and Fl. Wildgoose-Chase.

Is this the fellow,
That had the patience to become a fool,
A flirted fool. Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

To FLIRT.† v. n.

1. To jeer; to gibe at one.
2. To run about perpetually; to be unsteady and fluttering.

The wife that gads not, giglot-wise,
With every flirting gill.
Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon. (1576,) p. 224.

3. To act with levity; to be guilty of a kind of coquetry; from the preceding use of the word. Modern.

FLIRT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick elastic motion.
In unfurling the fan are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison, Spect.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights
While the spread fan o'ershades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.

2. A sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a shirt. B. Jonson, Gypsies.

3. A pert young hussey.
I do not apologize here for any headstrong, unruly, wanton flirts. Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Salute the skirts
Of her, to whom all ladies else are flirts. B. Jonson, Masques.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison, Guardian.

4. A jeer; a gibe.
They have play'd their prizes with me,
And with their several flirts they have lighted dangerously;
But sure I shall be quit. Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

FLIRT.* adj. Pert; wanton. Applied to gill as a woman. See GILL, and To FLIRT, v. n.
Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt gills. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Thou took'st me up at every word I spoke,
As I had been a maulin, a flirt gillian. Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

FLIRTATION.† n. s. [from flirt.]

1. A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.

2. Hence the more modern acceptation, a desire of attracting notice.

Flirtation is short of coquetry, and intimates only the first hints of approximation! La. Chesterfield, World, No. 101.

To FLIT.† v. n. [from To fleet; or from flytter, Danish; to remove; or from the Sax. flht.]

1. To fly away.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term. It was once common also in England, as it should seem, by the admission of it into Barret's Alveary in 1580. "To remove or go from one place to live in another: to flit." And it is still retained in our northern counties. See FLITTING. The examples from Spenser, given by Dr. Johnson, shew the word as a verb active, to put from its place; and flit is still older as a verb active, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it as such at all.

It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryden, Æn.

Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.

4. To be flux or unstable.
Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which might too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unsound. Spenser, F. Q.
The especial cause of this levity and flitting disposition in the common and ordinary sort of men, is their disability to discern the strength of such reasons as may be framed against them. Hales, Rem. p. 12.

He stopt at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden, Æn.

To FLIT.* v. a. To remove out of its place; to dispossess.

The head [of the arrow] was left behind —
So sore it stick'd when I was hit,
That by no craft I might it flit. Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1812.

His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls of men do fly that live amiss, Spenser, F. Q.
So hardly he the flitted life does win
Unto her native prison to return. Spenser, F. Q.

FLIT.† adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not now in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were light,
In poison and in blood of malice and despite. Spenser, F. Q.
And life itself's as flit as is the air we breathe. P. Fletcher, Purple Island, ii. 7.

FLITCH.† n. s. [fliece, Saxon; flycke, Danish; fleche, floche, French. Skinner. The old French, Dr. Johnson might have added, is flie; and the Iceland. flycke, probably from flaka to divide. See FLAKE. A flitch of bacon, is still common in the north of England. It is our old word.] The side of a hog salted and cured.

Another brought a spyeke
Of a bacon fliecke. Skelton, Poems, p. 133.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,

F L O

A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden, Jew.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Swift.
Addison.

To FLITTER.* v. n. [a corruption of flutter.]
he in agitation; to be flux or unstable.

Work of flittering matter. Chaucer, Boeth. Metr. ix.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes. Pope.

2. To be in a prosperous state.
If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. Shakespeare, Wind. Tales.
Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish. Shakespeare.

He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourished in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune. Dryden, Ded. to Lord Clifford.

Bad men as frequently prosper and flourish, and that by the means of their wickedness. Nelson.

3. To use florid language; to speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.

The Roman monarchy in her highest flourish never had the like. Howell, Instr. for Trav. p. 98.

2. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen.
The presentation of but what I was. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.

3. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness: far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish, there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetorick interposed between the sight and the object.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, tho' least believed by them. South, Serm.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang? Dryden.

4. Figures formed by lines curiously or warily drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

5. A kind of musical prelude.

The lute's light genius now does proudly rise,
Heav'd on the surges of swoll'n rhapsodies;
Whose flourish, meteor-like, doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies here and there Dancing in lofty measures. Crashaw, Poems, p. 85.

6. A blossom. North.

FLO'URISHER. n. s. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd old, they may, or in his flow'r;

To utter his mind eloquently, flourishingly, and finely.

Barret, Alo. 1580.

To FLOUT. † v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouwe, Frisick.

This is the etymology given by Dr. Johnson. But the word is from the Saxon. flutan, to quarrel, to scold, flout being, as Mr. H. Tooke says, the past part. of this verb. And it may be added that flit or flite is still used, like the Saxon, in the north of England.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency.

Shakspeare.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,

And fan our people cold. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;

Certainly he flouted us downright. Shakspeare, Coriol.

She rail'd at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her. Shakspeare.

The heroical spirit of Luther, for I cannot be flouted out of that word, hated the brotherly of their cloisters.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 42.

Phyllida flouts me.

Walton, Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument?

Shakspeare.

With talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude;

When you perty raise your snout,

Fleece and gibe, and laugh and flout.

Swift.

FLOUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,

Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,

With many a smile and leering flout.

Hudibras.

Their doors are barr'd against a flitter flout;

Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy, Serm.

FLOUTER. † n. s. [from flout.] One who jeers.

Democritus, that common flouter of folly.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

What's that to you, Goodman flouter?

Beaumont, and Fl. Little Fr. Lawyer.

FLOUTINGLY. * adv. [from flouting.] In an insulting or contemptuous manner.

To FLOW. v. n. [plopán, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god an I, whose yellow water flows

Around these fields, and fattens as it goes.

Dryden, En.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,

Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams.

Swift.

2. To run: opposed to standing waters.

With oiler floats the standing water strow;

Of many stones make bridges, if it flow.

Dryden.

3. To rise: not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between.

Shakspeare.

4. To melt.

Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence.

Is. lxiv. 1.

5. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't,

I shall do good.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse.

South.

6. To glide smoothly without asperity: as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetorick in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence.

Hakewill on Providence.

7. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters.

Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue

Than ever man pronounce'd, or angels sung.

Prior.

8. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men.

Chapman.

9. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

There every eye with slumb'rous chains she bound,

And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope, Odys.

10. To hang loose and waving.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers.

Spectator.

To FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

Watering hops is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,

We as art's elements shall understand. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood.

Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better.

South.

FLOWER. † n. s. [flur, Goth. fleur, French; flos, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglos: or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcisus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galeuculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compound flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flocculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmetum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum. 2d, Planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stameneous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.

Though the same sun with all diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, they him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill on Providence.

Truth needs no flower of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can never be long:
In flower of age you perish for a song. Pope, Marcella Impr.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal. [flur oeh lweti, Goth. fine flour.]

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do take receive the flower of all,
And leave me but the trim. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The flower of grapes, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Elements.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next there in words, and firm words shall be said,
Be twice ten measures of the choicest ale,
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope, Odyss.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

FLOWER de Luce.† n. s. [fleur-de-lis, Fr. Our word was formerly written flower-delice, and is thus distinguished by the contemporary commentator on Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar: "Flower delice, that which they use to mistermine fleur deluce, being in Latin called flos deliciarum." A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Cropp'd are the flower de luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The iris is the flower de luce. Peacock.

The goodly flower-delice. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

To FLOW'ER. v. n. [fleurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Spenser, F. Q.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton, P. L.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden, Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope, Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift I wander'd her; and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.

To FLOW'ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLOWER-GENTLE.* n. s. A species of amaranth.

Blue harebells, pagles, pansies, calaminth,
Flower-gentle, and the fair-hair'd hyacinth. B. Jonson, Masques.

FLOWER-INWOVEN.* adj. [flower and inwoven.] Adorned with flowers.

F L O

With flower-inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

FLO'WORAGE. † n. s. [from flower; French fleurage.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLO'WERET. n. s. [fleur, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would disguise
With gaudy garlands or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Spenser, F. Q.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakespeare.

So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton, P. L.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden, Fab.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. s. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field,
I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLO'WERINESS. † n. s. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLO'WERING.* n. s. [from flower.]

1. State of blossom; as, the flowering of bulbous plants.

2. A sort of froth.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLO'WERINGBUSH. n. s. A plant.

FLO'WERLESS.* adj. [flower and less; one of our oldest words.] Without a flower.

An herbe he brought, flowerlesse, all grene.
Chaucer, Ch. Dream, ver. 1860.

FLO'WERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton, Ode.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw.
To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLO'WERY-KIRTLED.* adj. [flowery and kirtle. See KIRTLE.] Dressed in robes or garlands of flowers.

The flowery-kirtled Naiades,
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs. Milton, Comus.

FLO'WING.* n. s. [from flow.] The rise of the water; the flow.

In religious forms, what ebbings and flowings have been, and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 154.
We must have perpetual ebbings and flowings of mirth and melancholy. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 42.

FLO'WINGLY. † adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance. Sherwood.

FLO'WINGNESS.* n. s. [from flowing.] A stream of diction.

Dr. Tillotson polished over whatever was left rough in the compositions with his smooth language, and flowingness of his easy eloquence.

Nichols, Def. of the Doct. and Disc. of the Ch. of Eng. Introd.

F L U

FLOWK. † n. s. [Sax. ploc. See FLOOK.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FLO'WKWORT. n. s. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton, P. L.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton, P. L.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. † adj. [fluctuans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

Such is the fluctuant condition of human generation, and of those relations, which arise from thence, that he, which is this day a son, the next may prove a father, and in the space of one day more, without any real alteration in himself, become neither son, nor father, losing one relation by the death of him who begat him, and the other by the departure of him that was begotten of him. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [fluctuo, Lat.]

1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
Now part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton, P. L.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison, Spect.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUA'TION. † n. s. [fluctuatio, Lat. fluctuation, Fr.
from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interja-cency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgement little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

3. Violent agitation.

I have seen a crowd of disordered people rush violently, and in heaps, till their utmost border was restrained by a wall, or had spent the fury of the first fluctuation and watery progress; and by and by it returned to the contrary with the same earnestness, only because it was violent and ungoverned.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 8.

FLU

FLUE† n. s. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the French fourche, an opening, whence our old word lower, signifying an opening to let out smoke; used by Spenser. See LOUVER.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

Flew [flue] a narrow outlet for smoke, to encrease the draught of air. North. Pegge.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE LIN. n. s. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLUENCE* n. s. [from fluent.] Copiousness; readiness. Not now in use.

Poetry indeed hath a fluence of expression.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 478.

FLUENCY, n. s. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantness for admirers of points of wit. Garth, Prof. to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency.

King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire.

Tickell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift, Thoughts on various Subjects.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease, •

—behold him tost on seas. Sandys, Pharaphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sandys.

FLUENT, adj. [fluens, Lat.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluid, but stupified.

Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech.

Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance.

Denham, Sophy.

FLUENT† n. s.

1. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'lous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death.

Philips.

2. In the doctrine of fluxions, flowing quantity.

They must know to find fluxions from fluents.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 47.

FLUENTLY† adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

To speak divinely, or by inspiration, was the usual phrase whereby they expressed speaking fluently, pathetically, and with coherence. Spencer, Kan. of Vulg. Prophecies, p. 74.

FLUID, adj. [fluidum, Lat. fluide, Fr.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind

The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,

Let it again dissolve, and show the earth?

Milton, P. L.

FLU

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton, Opticks.

FLUID† n. s.

1. Any thing not solid.

The doctrine and laws of fluids are of the greatest extent in philosophy. Chambers.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

FLUIDITY, n. s. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton, Opticks.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity.

Arbuthnot.

FLUIDNESS, n. s. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUKE* See FLOOK and FLOWK. Both the fish, and the part of an anchor, are frequently written fluke.

FLUME* n. s. [Sax. plum; old Fr. flum, "fume, riviere," Lacombe. One also of our own oldest words. Lat. flumen.] A river. Obsolete.

They weren baptised of him in the flume Jordan.

Wicliffe, St. Mark, i.

FLUMMERY† n. s. [llymru, Welsh.]

1. A kind of food made by conglutination of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

2. Flattery; either an enlargement of flam, or a figurative usage of the preceding meaning.

FLUNG, participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLUOR, n. s. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton, Opticks.

2. Catamenia.

FLURRY† n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. or German, flugs, hastily, in a hurry; or perhaps a corruption of fluster.]

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the North.

Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

One is kept in perpetual alarm, and flurry of spirits, for the first or second time of assisting at this diversion, [a bull-fight.]

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 40

To FLURRY v. a. [from the noun.] To keep in agitation; to alarm.

After so long a journey through the still wastes, and silent stupid towns of Spain, where every thing bears the mark of languor and indolence, we were at first quite flustered and confounded with the hurry in the garrison, the perpetual noise of cannon, and the reports of the soldiers going through their firing exercise.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Let. 2da (1776.)

FLU

To FLUSH.† v. n. [fluysen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flur, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel.

Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To come in haste. Dr. Johnson here cites a passage from Ben Jonson, where the verb is active, in the sportman's sense of springing birds. The following passage will explain the present meaning of coming in haste.

Oh your crush'd nostrils slake your oppilation,
And makes your pent powers flush to wholesome sneezes.

Beaum. and Fl. Nice Value.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd. Milton, P. L.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.

At once, array'd

In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson, Spring.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.

A flake of fire that, flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH.† v. a.

1. To colour; to redden; properly to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addison, Cato.

Moisture and fluxure.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Fluid matter.

The swollen fluxure of the clouds.

Drayton, Baron's Wars, ii. 16.

To FLY.† pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown.

v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, flehen, Saxon, and makes fled.] They are now confounded. Fly, or pleogan, are evidently from the Latin volo, to fly.

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown.

His cloister'd flight.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

Gen. i. 20.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.

Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

Job, v.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,

Help thee to pass the tedious time,

Which else would on thy hand remain;

Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.

Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed

Return, and through the city spread the news.

Dryden.

Earth rolls back with the flying steed.

Pope.

5. To move with great velocity.

As striplings fly to top for sport,

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,

The wooden engine flies and whirls about.

Dryden.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,

FLY

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He beams heads, to save his own, made fly;

And now, the sultan to preserve, must die.

Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance flies;

Be cautious, or your bottle flies.

Swift.

8. [plean, Saxon; flehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense. See To FLEE.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,

As lion fierce, upon the flying prey.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake.

Zeck, xiv. 5.

Abiathar escaped, and fled after David.

1 Sam. xxii. 20.

What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,

Reviv'd the drooping arts again;

If science rais'd her head,

And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.

Dryden.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,

And live in shades with her and love alone.

Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;

Forsake shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,

Forsake mankind, and all the world but love.

Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.

South, Serm.

This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults.

South.

10. To FLY at. To hawk; to catch birds by means of hawks.

Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,

I saw not better sport these seven years' day.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

11. To FLY back. To start; to become restiff, as a horse.

12. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.

Swift, Draper's Letters.

13. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:

— But how, if nature fly in my face first?

— Then nature's the aggressor.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

14. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;

The images of revolt and flying off.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The traitor Syphax

Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.

Addison, Cato.

15. To FLY on. To spring with violence upon; to fly at.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,

Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword

To his great master; who, threat engag'd,

Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

16. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,

From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out.

In contumelies, makes a noise and stinks.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

17. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spurr'd and rein'd;

If I fly out, my fierceness you command.

Dryden.

FLY

Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

18. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley, Serm.

19. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granville.

20. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

21. To float in the air; as they marched out of the town, by capitulation, with drums beating, colours flying, &c. i. e. with honour. Hence perhaps the vulgar expression, "to come off with flying-colours."

To FLY.† v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakespeare.
O Joye, I think

Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon, Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton, S. A.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden, Juv.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden, Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
Fly every thing you see to the mark, and censure it freely.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady, Induct.

5. To cause to fly, or float in the air, as, to fly an artificial kite.

6. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flye are carefully kept separate.

FLY.† n. s. [pleoge, plie, Saxon; flug, Icel.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.

To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson, Summer.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

FLY

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616,) p. 84.

Then 'mongst the rout he flew as swift,
As weapon made by Cyclops,
And bravely quell'd sedition's buzz,
By dint of masty fly-flaps. Song of St. George for England.

FLYING-FISH.* n. s. [fly and fish.] A fish of the gurnard kind.

F O B

The greatest recreation we had, was to view such large shoals of flying-fishes, as, by their interposing multitude, for some time darkened the sun; a fish beautiful in its eye; the body, though no larger than a small herring, yet big enough for those complemental fins, which, so long as moist, serve as wings to fly 200 paces or more, and 40 foot high.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

FOAL.† n. s. [M. Goth. fūla; Su. Goth. fole; Sax. pola, pole. Our old authors write the word fole.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and filly for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind.

*Spenser, F. Q.
Gen. xxxii. 15.*

To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight
Ten able horses.

Shakespeare, Timon.

Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly.

May, Georgicks.

He foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth. St. Mark, ix. 18.

FO'AMINGLY. * adv. [from foaming.] Slaveringly; frothily. Cotgrave in V. Baveusement, and Sherwood.

FO'AMY. adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.

More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace.

Sidney.

Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the juster side.

Dryden.

FOB. n. s. [fuppe, fupsacke, German.] A small pocket.

Who pick'd a fob at folding forth. Hudibras.

When were the dice with more profusion thrown?

The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone. Dryden, Jun.

He put his hand into his fob, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper.

Addison, Spect.

Two pockets he called his fobs: they were two large slits squeezed close by the pressure of his belly.

Swift.

F O D

Orphans around his bed the lawyer sees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-parie, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fob.

Swift.

To FOB. v. a. [fuppen, German.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fob'd in it.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fob'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He goes pressing forward, till he was fobbed again, with another story.

L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,

To get their wives and children meat;

But these will not be fob'd off so,

They must have wealth and power too.

Hudibras.

By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,

So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;

But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,

The rascal fob'd me off with only wine.

Addison.

Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fob'd off with a garter.

Addison, Frecholder.

FO'CAL. adj. [from focus.] Belonging to the focus.

See FOCUS.

Schelhammer demandeth whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them.

Derham, Physico-Theology.

FO'CIL.† n. s. [focile, French; originally an Arabick expression for the two bones of the arm and leg here named.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle, or elbow and wrist.

The fracture was of both the focils of the left leg.

Wiseman, Surgery.

FOCILLA'TION. n. s. [focilla, Lat.] Comfort; support.

Dict.

FOCUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. [In opticks.] The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concourse, where the rays meet and cross the axis after their refraction by the glass.

Harris.

The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Focus of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and distant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter, or latus rectum.

Harris.

3. Focus of an Ellipsis. A point towards each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, shall be together equal to that longer axis.

Harris.

4. Focus of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the opposite hyperbolas; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the opposite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis.

Dict.

FODDER.† n. s. [Sax. fōsen, fōbbon, from fōsian, to feed; Su. Goth. fōda, to feed; Irish, fōder, straw; Icel. fōdr, food for cattle. See FORMER.]
Dry food stored up for cattle against winter.

Their cattle, starving for want of fodder, corrupted the air.

Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a necessity of fodder.

Temple.

Of grass and fodder thou defraud'st the dams,
And of their mother's dugs the starving lambs. Dryden, Virg.
To FO'DDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.

Natural earth is taken from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddered on.
 Evelyn's Kalendar.

From winter keep,
Well fodder'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep. Dryden, Virg.
A farm of fifty pound hath commonly three barns, with as many cowyards to fodder cattle in. Mortimer, Husbandry.
Straw will do well enough to fodder with. Mortimer.

FO'DDERER.† n. s. [Sax. podpepe.] He who fodders cattle. Sherwood.

FOE.† n. s. [Sax. fah, an enemy; perhaps from fian, to hate; fa, Scottish. Runick faat, secret hatred; Cimbr. faide, enmity; Icel. faide; Goth. faad. Hence our feud; to which likewise foe-hood is akin; a word which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. Fonc is our ancient plural of foe, and often occurs in the poetry of Spenser.]

1. An enemy in war.
Ere he had established his throne,
He fought great battles with his savage foe,
In which he them defeated ever more. Spenser, F. Q.
Never but one more was either like
To meet so great a foe. Milton.

2. A persecutor; an enemy in common life.
God's benison go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakespeare.
Fore'd by thy worth, thy foe in death become,
Thy friend has lodg'd thee in a costly tomb. Dryden, Fub.
Thy defects to know,
Make use of ev'ry friend, and ev'ry foe. Pope.

3. An opponent; an illwisher.
He that considers and enquires into the reason of things, is counted a foe to received doctrines. Watts on the Mind.

To FOE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To treat as an enemy.
Not now in use.
In his power she was to foe or friend.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 6.

FO'EHOOB.* [Sax. fah and had, the quality, condition, or character of a foe.] Enmity.
Have you forgotten S. Hierome's and Rufinus's deadly foe-hood which was rung over the world?
Bp. Bedell, Cop. of Cert. Letters, (1620,) ch. 2. p. 325.
Composals of these inbred foehoods.
Dr. Jackson, Works, ii. 522.

FO'ELIKE.* adj. [foe and like, Sax. fa-læca.] In the character of an enemy.
He ———
Foelike hath bent his bow; his hostile hand
Advanc'd, and slain the beauty of the land.
Sandys, Lament, p. 4.

FO'EMAN.† n. s. [from foe and man, Sax. fahmon.] Enemy in war; antagonist. An obsolete word, Dr. Johnson says. Some poets of the present time have endeavoured to re-establish this word, which once indeed was common.
Here haunts that fiend, and does his daily spoil;
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fell. Spenser, F. Q.
What valiant foeman, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride?
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
When by report of subjects I did hear
How foemen were arrived on my shore,
I gathered all my soldiers void of feare. Mir. for Mag. p. 17.
VOL. II.

Art nor cunning shall not lack,
To preserve thee, still to keep,
What thy envious foemen seek.
Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleas'd.

FOETUS. n. s. [Latin.] The child in the womb after it is perfectly formed: but before, it is called embryo. Quincy.

A fætus, in the mother's womb, differs not much from the state of a vegetable. Locke.

FOG.† n. s. [Icel. fug, Dan. fog, a storm, a fall of snow, snow driven by the wind. It seems to be connected with the Lat. fuligo, a mist, darkness.] A thick mist; a moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.

Infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs drawn by the pow'ful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon.
Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away;
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow? Crawshaw.
Fogs we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Fog.† n. s. [fugagium, low Latin. "Gruen in foresta regis locatur pro fugagio." Leges Forest. Scotiae.] Aftergrass; grass which grows in autumn after the hay is mown. In the north of England, it means long grass remaining in pasture till winter. So Du Cange in V. FOGAGIUM. "Gruen, quod æstate non depascitur, et quod, spoliatis jam pratis, hiemali tempore succrescit."
The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother slades.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

To FOG.* v. a. [from the noun.] To overcast; to darken; "to fog over." Sherwood.

To FOG.* v. n. [Fr. vogue, sway, authority; voguer, to go forward.] To have power. Hence our word pettifogger, one who has little influence, practice, or power. The present word has hitherto been unobserved.

The fogging proctorage of money.
Milton, of Reformation in Eng. B. 2.

FO'GAGE.* n. s. [low Lat. fogagium.] In the forest law, rank grass, not eaten in the summer. Chambers.

FO'GGILY. adv. [from foggy.] Mistily; darkly; cloudily.

FO'GINESS. n. s. [from foggy.] The state of being dark or misty; cloudiness; mistiness.

FO'GGY.† adj. [from fog.]

1. Misty; cloudy; dank; full of moist vapours.
Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.
And Phœbus flying so, most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame. Spenser.
Whence have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
As cleere Phœbus, when some foggy cloud
His brightness from the world a while doth shrowd, Doth by degrees begiane to shew his light. Brown.
Let not the air be subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining. Wotton, Architecture.
About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants. Evelyn's Kalendar.

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

FOI

I will pass over your coarse, foggy, drowsy conceit, that there are few or none simple monarchies in the world.

Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) p. 35.

FOH. interject. [from fah, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence: as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends,
Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural. Shakspeare, Othello.

FOIBLE.* adj. [French, foible; Ital. fiavole; probably from the Lat. foibilis, to be lamented. Our word is now used perhaps only as a substantive, signifying defect, a weak side; but is no doubt adopted from the adjective, though our lexicographers have thought the adjective unworthy of any notice, in the sense formerly used by fencers; foible being the word for the weakest part of a blade, in contradistinction to fort, the strongest.] Weak.

The fencing-masters, when they present a foyle or fleuret to their scholars, tell him it hath two parts; one of which he calleth the fort or strong, and the other the foible or weak.

Ld. Herbert's Life, p. 46.

FO'IBLE.† n. s. [from the adjective.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.

He knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physick.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument.

Watts, Logic.

To FOIL. v. a. [affoler, to wound, old French.]

1. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

Amazement seiz'd

The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see

Thus foil'd their mightiest.

Milton, P. L.

Leader of those armies bright,

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd.

Milton, P. L.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:
Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variously representing; yet still
Approve the best, and follow what I approve.
Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil!

Milton, P. L.

Waller.

He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature.

Wiseman, Surgery.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foil'd, that they now despair of ever getting the day.

Calamy, Sermon.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;

And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.

Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunderer,

Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;

With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,

And by a mortal man at length am foil'd.

Dryden, Æn.

2. [fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil'd, with wanton dulness,

My speculative and offic'd instruments.

Shakspeare.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whil'st I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase.

Addison.

FOIL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;

One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Whosoever overthrow his mare in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil. Cassus.

So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall.

Milton, P. L.

When age shall level me to impotence,

And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,

Nor e'er was fate so near a foil.

Dryden.

2. [feuille, French, folium, Lat.] Leaf; gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,

Which cunningly was without mortar laid,

Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,

And golden foil all over them display'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,

Nor in the glistering foil

Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milton, Lycidas.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun

To set for foil of his milk-white to serve.

Sidney.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,

My reformation glittering o'er my fault,

Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,

Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The sullen passage of thy weary steps

Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set

The precious jewel of thy home.

Shakspeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastich and burnt ivory.

Grew, Museum.

Hector has a foil to set him off: we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. [from fouiller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

5. The steel of a looking-glass. [Fr. feuille, leaf; Lat. folium.]

Sherwood.

Foil, among looking-glass-grinders, is a sheet of tin with quicksilver, or the like, laid on the backside of a looking-glass, to make it reflect.

Chambers.

FO'ILABLE.* adj. [from foil.] Which may be foiled; refusable; rejectable.

Cotgrave in F. Rebutable, and Sherwood.

FO'ILER. n. s. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

FO'ILING.* n. s. Among hunters, the mark, barely visible, where deer have passed over grass.

To FOIN.† v. n. [poindre, Fr. pungo, Lat.] To push in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,

And every way did seek into his life;

Ne plate, ne mail, could ward so mighty throws,

But yielded passage to his cruel knife.

Spenser, F. Q.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out; he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He was fain to defend himself from the boar, a great while, the boar continually foining at him with his great tusks.

Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance

Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:

They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore

Their corselets, and the thinnest parts explore.

Dryden.

To FOIN.* v. a. To prick; to sting.

Hulot, and Barret.

FOIN.† n. s. [from the verb.] A thrust; a push.

At hand strokes they use not swords, but poll-axes, which be mortal as well in sharpness as in weight, both for foines and down strokes.

Robinson, Transl. of More's Utopia, (1551,) ch. 10.

Come; no matter vor your foins. Shakespeare, X. Lear.
I had my wards, and foins, and quarter-blows.

Wise Wom. of Hogsdon, (1638.)

FO'INGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

FO'ISON. † n. s. [old French, foison, (for there is no such Sax. word, I think, as poison, given by Dr. Johnson,) from foisonner, to abound. It may be from the Lat. fusio, copious; or, as Menage says, from fusio.] Plenty; abundance. A word now out of use, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still used in several counties.

Pay justly thy tithes, whatsoever thou be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee. Tusser.

Be wilful to kill, and unskilful to store,
And look for no foison, I tell thee before. Tusser.

Nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shakespeare, Tempest.

As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FOIST. † v. a. [fauusser, French.] To insert by forgery; to falsify. It appears to have been adopted from the practice of gamblers; "to foist or cog a die," Barret's Alv. 1580; "to foist or cog," Sherwood's Dict. 1632.

Lest negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Forge law, and foist it into some by-place
Of some old rotten roll. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

FOIST.  n. s.* [old Fr. fuste, "a foist, a light galley," Cotgrave; perhaps from the Lat. fustis, in the sense of wood. "A fuste seu ligno dicta navis species, quam vulgo fuste dicimus; nam et naves nudè ligna vocantur." See Du Cange in V. FUSTA.] A light and swift ship. Barret.

This pink, this painted foist, this cockle-boat.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

FO'ISTER.  n. s.* [from To foist.] A falsifier; "a liar." Sherwood.

These able are at neede to stand and keepe the stake,
When facing foisters, fit for Tiburne fraies,
Are lood-sick, faint; or, heart-sick, run their waies.

Mir. for Mag. p. 483.

FOISTIED.  adj.* [Fr. fusté.] Mustied; vinowed. Hudnot.

FO'ISTINESS. n. s. [from foisty.] Fustiness; mouldiness.

Dress mustard, and lay it in collar up sweet,
Lest foistiness make it for table unmeet. Tusser.

FO'ISTY. † adj. [Fr. fusté. See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fusty.

The old motheaten, leaden legend; and the foisty and fennowed festival.

Favour, Antiq. Triumph over Novelty, (1619,) p. 334.

FOLD. † n. s. [Sax. falab, falb, from the Goth. faldan, to fold up. "Huc pertinet illud palb, vel palb, quod Anglosaxonibus olim denotabat stabulum, proprie verò septum ex stipitibus cratibusque in terram defixis complicatisque factum." Jun. Gloss. Goth. in V. FALDAN.]

1. The ground in which sheep are confined.

His eye he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheepwalks and folds.

Milton, P. L.

In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold Slain.

Milton, Sonnet.

2. The place where sheep are housed.

Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep.
Numb. xxxii. 24.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come.

Raleigh.

3. The flock of sheep.

And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yeining on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my failing fold. Dryden, Virg.

4. A limit; a boundary.

Secure from meeting, they're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold. Creech.

5. An enclosure of any kind as fold-garth, still used in the north of England, for the farm-yard.

6. [From palb, Saxon.] A double; a complication; an involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Shakespeare, X. Lear.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze!

Milton, P. L.

Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large: the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd beholds
The gloves of death, with seven distinguished folds
Of tough bull hides.

Dryden, Virg. Æn.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbuthnot.

7. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition. Fold signifies the same quantity added: as, two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold.

St. Matt. xiii. 8.

At last appear

Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamant rock.

Milton, P. L.

Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant, that from these may grow
A hundred fold.

Milton, Sonnet.

TO FOLD. † v. a. [Goth. faldan; Sax. fealban.]

1. To shut sheep in the fold.

The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heaven doth hold.

Milton, Comus.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And unbought dainties of the poor.

Dryden, Horace.

2. To double; to complicate.

As a venture shalt thou fold them up.
Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep.

Heb. i. 12.

Prov. vi. 10.

They be folded together as thorns.
I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, seal it, and again return to bed.

Nah. i. 10.

Shakespeare.

Conscious of its own impotence, it folds its arms in despair, and sits cursing in a corner.

Collier of Bury.

Both furl their sails, and strip them for the fight;
Their folded sheets dismiss the useless air.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

3. To enclose; to include; to shut.

F O L

We will descend and fold him in our arms.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The fires i' th' lowest hell fold in the people.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

To FOLD. v. n. To close over another of the same kind; to join with another of the same kind.

The two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding. Kings, vi. 34.

FO'LDER.* n. s. [from fold.] One who folds up any thing. Lat. rugator. Huicet.

FO'LDING.* n. s. [from fold.] Applied to sheep, means the keeping them on arable lands within folds made of hurdles, which they remove about, so that when they have duned one place they are set upon another.

We see that the folding of sheep helps ground, as well by their warmth as by their compost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FOLE.* See FOAL.

FOLIA'CEOUS. adj. [foliaceus, from folium, Latin.] Consisting of laminæ or leaves.

A piece of another, consisting of an outer crust, of a ruddy talky spar, and a blue talky foliaceous spar.

Woodward on Fossils.

FOL'LIAGE. n. s. [folium, Latin; feuille, French.]

Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom.

Addison on Italy.

When swelling buds their od'rous foliage shed,

And gently harden into fruit, the wise

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow

Redundant.

Philips.

To FO'LIAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To work so as to represent foliage.

There is in this place one very great square, in the middle of which appears an huge composite foliaged column.

Drummond, Travels, p. 58.

Behold his chair, whose fractur'd seat infirm

An aged cushion hides! replete with dust

The foliag'd velvet, pleasing to the eye,

Of great Eliza's reign, but now the snare

Of weary guest, that on the specious bed

Sits down confiding.

Shenstone, Economy, P. III.

To FO'LIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium, Latin.] To beat into laminas or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth.

Bacon.

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the frust which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these being tender and pulpos, and coming forth in the Spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers.

Quincy.

FO'LIATURE.† n. s. [from folium, Latin.] The state of being hammered into leaves.

Dict.

They wreathed together a foliature of the fig-tree.

Shuckford on the Creation, p. 203.

FO'LIER.* n. s. [Dutch; foeli; French; feuille.] Goldsmiths' foil.

Concerning the preparing these foliers, it is to be observed, how and out of what substance they are prepared.

Hist. R. Soc. ii. 489.

F O I

FO'LIO.† n. s. [in folio, Latin.]

1. A leaf or page of a book; fol. a and b, or recto and verso, being ancient and still continued distinctions for the first and second sides of the leaf in manuscripts and early-printed books. This is the primary sense of folio; the first writing being on leaves.

2. A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

I am for whole volumes in folio. Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Plumbinus and Plumeo made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folios. Watts on the Mind.

FO'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Latin.] A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded: vulgarly called filemot. See FILEMOT.

A flinty pebble was of a dark green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour.

Woodward on Fossils.

FO'LIOT.* n. s. [Ital. foletto, "a spirit, a hobgoblin, a robin-goodfellow," Florio, World of Words, 1598.] A kind of demon.

Terrestrial devils are wood-nymphs, foliots, fairies, robin-goodfellows, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

Another sort of these [demons] are, which frequent forlorn houses; which the Italians call foliots, most part innoxious.

Hurton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

FO'LIIOUS.* adj. [from the Lat. folium.] Leafy; thin and unsubstantial as a leaf.

Folious appearances, and not the central and vital interiors of truth.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 3.

FOLK.† n. s. [folc, Sax. volk, Dutch; folk, Icel. fouk, old French; ῥχλος, Gr. Æol. Φολλος, and by transposition Φολχος; Lat. volgens. It is properly a noun collective; and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolorous discourses of their own and other folks' misfortune.

Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son.

Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,

You'd think he talk'd like other folk;

For all a rhetorician's rules

Teach nothing but to name his tools.

Hudibras.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Psal. lvii. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thence hath flow'd, no ebb between;

And the old folk's time's doting chronicles,

Say it did so a little time before.

Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness: as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks.

Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,

Remembers he the tree has seen,

And goes with folks to shew the sight.

Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak;

He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk.

Swift.

FO'KLAND.* n. s. [Sax. polcland.] Copyhold land, in contradistinction to bookland (bocland) or charter-land.

They held their small portions of land as an inheritance—not by charter, but by a sort of prescription: this was called folkland.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FO'LMOTE.† n. s. [Sax. polczemot, polcmot; folk, the people, and mete, a meeting, Su. Goth.] A meeting of people.

F O L

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folk-motes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

To which folk-mote they all, with one consent, Agreed to travel. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 6.

These held a court every fortnight, which they called the folk-mote or leet, and there became reciprocally bound to each other, and to the publick, for their own peaceable behaviour, and that of their families and dependants.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FOLLICLE. n. s. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of cholet from the liver into the guts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

FOLLIFUL.* adj. [folly and full.] Full of folly.

This is an old Scottish expression; and is an English vulgarity.

The common people call wit, mirth; and fancy, folly: fanciful and follyful they use indiscriminately. Shenstone.

FOLLILY.* adv. [from folly.] Foolishly. Obsolete.

Used both by Wicliffe and Chaucer.

To FOLLOW.† v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch; folgā, Goth. to follow.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Him all his train

Follow'd in bright procession to behold Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton, P. L.

What could I do,

But follow strait, invisibly thus led. Milton, P. L.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place To seek Sebastian, through a track of death I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain God is as here, and will be found alike Present, and of his presence many a sign Still following thee, still compassing thee round With goodness and paternal love, his face Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton, P. L.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton, P. L.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sways, Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid, And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden, Æn.
We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follows him as shall be registered, Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milton, P. L.
Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold And venturous, if that fail them, shrink and fear What yet they know must follow, to endure Exile, or ignominy, or bonds or pain. Milton, P. L.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

F O L

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancient and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

All patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules.

Locke on Education.

9. To obey; to observe as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore.

Milton, P. R.

Fair virtue, should I follow thee,

I should be naked and alone,

For thou art not in company,

And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men.

Hebrews, xii. 14.

Follow not that which is evil.

3 John, ver. 11.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser on Ireland.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclus. xxix. 9.

To FOLLOW.† v. n.

1. To come after another.

The famine shall follow close after you.

Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow

To the oracle of Apollo.

B. Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,

That in the nature of their lords rebels:

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To be posterior in time.

Living carcases design'd

For death, the following day, in bloody fight. Milton, P. L.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the mis-carriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord.

Hos. vi. 3.

FOLLOWER.† n. s. [from follow; Sax. folgere.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakspeare, Merr. Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise, Spurr'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South, Sermon.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend.

Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?

—With Poins, and other his continual followers. *Shakespeare, Hen. IV.*Grief is an impudent guest,
A follower every where. Beaumont and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. *Spenser on Ireland.*And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden, Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. *1 Cor. xi. 1.*The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. *Sprat, Sermon.*Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. *Boscoe.*The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their King and their Master. *Nelson.*The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope, Essays.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FOLLY.† n. s. [old Fr. folle; Welsh, folcz.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly childhood's guide,
This is childhood at her side. Hawkesworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

She hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house. *Deut. xxii. 21.*They have committed lewdness and folly in Israel. *Judges, xx. 6.*Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to folly. *Shakespeare.*Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot. *Prior.*Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. *Pope, Horace.*To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. *Wotton.*Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. *Dryden.*They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. *Looke.*FOMENTATION.† n. s. [fomentation, French; from foment.]1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot fannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, as regard of the way made by the patient, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Excitation; encouragement.

This gentleman leaveth Italy in present tranquillity, though not without a little fear of some alteration on the side of Savoy: which prince seemeth to have great and unquiet thoughts; and, I fear, they will lack no fomentation from abroad. *Sir H. Wotton, Lett. Rem. p. 276.*And dive in science for distinguished names,
Bishonest fomentation of your pride! *Young, Night-Th. 5.*FOMENTER.† n. s. [from foment.] One that foment; an encourager; a supporter.These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. *Hawell.*The kindler, fomentor, and advancer of the whole German war. Bewailing of the Peace of Germany, (1635) p. 113.

A perpetual fomentor and nourisher of sin.

*Hale, Sermon. End of his Remains, p. 25.*FON.† n. s. [a word used by Chaucer for a fool, which Mr. Tyrwhitt designates as Saxon; but, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, there is no similar word in that language. "It is," he observes, "the same with the Su. Goth. and Icel. faane, fatuus; whence faana, faanast, fatuè se gerere; Su. Goth. faanig, delirus, stultus; Icel. fanytr, homo nihili; Germ. fanzen, nugas agere. Perhaps this is the origin of the English fond, and also of fun, sport." But see FUN. Wicliffe, it may be added, uses foned for foolish. We have also, in our old language, the term fond-plough for fool-plough, a kind of pageant.] A fool; an ideot.Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. *Spenser, Shep. Cal.*FOND.† adj. [fon, Scottish; a word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology; to fonne is in Chaucer to dont, to be foolish. So far Dr. Johnson. See, however, the etymology of the preceding word, fon.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. *Hooker.*He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. *Ascham.*Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. *Shakespeare, Coriol.*Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. *Shakespeare, Timon.*I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance, Shakespeare.Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. *Davies.*Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. *Milton, P. L.*So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t'invite. Milton, S. A.'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish. *Waller.*But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infusions. *Dryden, Tyrant Love.*This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.
Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted:
with of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.
Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts on the Mind.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the adjective.] To treat
To FONDLE. } with great indulgence; to caress; to cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'm fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryden, Æn.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting;
but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with;
to doat on.

How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.

To FOND. * v. n. [Sax. funbian.] *To strive; to try. Obsolete.

Though I sickness have upon bonde,
And long have had, yet will I fonde
To make a boke after his heste. Gower, Conf. Am. Proh.
I will fonde to espion on my side,
To whom I may be wedded hastily. Chaucer, March. Tale.

FO'NDLER. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FO'NDLING. † n. s. [from fondle.]

1. A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.
Quite you well in feld and town,
And of all the fondlyngs make a deliverance.
Mystery of Candlemas-Day, (1512.)

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any lady may'ress;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

2. A fool. Yet so used, I believe, in the north of England.

We have many such fondlings, that are their wives' packhorses and slaves. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 603.

FO'NDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Philips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:

Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,

He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:

Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain. Pope.
Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FO'NDNESS. † n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgement.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser, Sonnets.
So many absurd and indeed ridiculous consequences do follow the fondness of this argument.
Ep. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 55.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison, Cato.

Hopeless mother!
Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness.
A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change.

Hammond's Fundamentals.
Not that he had any fondness to the number itself.
Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 245.

FONE. n. s. Plural of foe. Obsolete.

A barbarous troupe of clownish fane, Spenser.

physicians called fontinels, or little fountains.

Hammond on St. Mark, iv. 29.
A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fontanel in her arm. Wiceman of Inflammation.

FONTANGE.† n. s. [from the name of the first wearer, Dr. Johnson says. This was Mademoiselle de Fontange, one of the French king's mistresses; as the amusing Fop-Dictionary of 1690 informs us.] A knot of ribbands on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

These old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs.

Addison.

FOOD.† n. s. [Sax. foð, food; feban, to feed; Goth. fodeins, food; Su. foda, to nourish; Dutch, voeden, to feed; Scottish, feed.]

1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,

That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakespeare.
Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.

Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;

Food not of angels, yet accepted so,

As that more willingly thou could'st not seem

At heav'n's high feasts t' have fed. Milton, P. L.

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.

Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

O dear son Edgar,

The food of thy abused father's wrath,

Might I but live to see thee in my touch,

I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To Food.* v. a. [voeden, Dutch; foda, Su. feban, Sax.] To feed. Obsolete.

He was fooded forth in vain with long talk.

Barret, Alv. (1580.)

1. One to whom nature has denied reason; a natural; an idiot.

Dost thou call me fool, boy?

—All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,

Which pry not to the interior. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger, a wise man. Locke.

He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

2. [In Scripture.] A wicked man.

The fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Ps. xiv. 1.

3. A term of indignity and reproach.

To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind.

Dryden, Juv. Pref.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.

Where's my knave, my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester.

Milton.

If this disguise sit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the Fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

*I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the Fool. To act like one void of common understanding.

I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

1 Sam. xxvi. 21.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a Fool of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

To Fool. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy;
to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fool not; for all may have,

If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.

L'Estrange.

Is this a time for fooling?

Dryden, Span. Friar.

To Fool. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate;
to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Him over-weaning

To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,

Fool'd and beguil'd.

Milton, P. L.

If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South, Serm.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;

For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dryden.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,

Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts

Against their father, fool me not so much

To bear it tamely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,

As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:

This but thy judgement fools; the other way

Would both thy folly and thy spite betray.

B. Jonson.

It were an handsome plot,

But full of difficulties, and uncertain;

And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,

He'll ne'er believe it. Denham, Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Calamy, Serm.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.

3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.

FOOL.* n. s. [probably from fouler, Fr.] A liquid made of gooseberries scalded and pounded, and of cream.

Thou full dish of fool. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Fall to your cheese-cakes, curds, and clouted cream,

Your fool, your flaws. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

FOOLBO'LD.* adj. [fool and bold.] Foolishly bold; foolhardy. Not now in use.

Some in corners have been foolbold.

Conclus. of Leland's Journey, enlarged by Balc, L. 3. b.

FOOLBORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

FOOL'ERY.† n. s. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

He keeps the house of pride and foolery.

Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. An act of folly: trifling practice.

Talk not much with a fool, and go not to him that hath no understanding. Beware of him, lest thou have trouble; and thou shalt never be defiled with his fooleries. Eccles. xxii. 13.

I shall do that that's fit, sir;

And fit to cross your fooleries. Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.

That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh, Hist.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange.

FOOLHA'PPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgement.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,

An hidden rock escaped unawares,

That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;

The mariner, yet half amazed, stares

At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares

To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Spenser, F. Q.

FOOLHA'RDINESS.† n. s. [from foolhardy.] The old French language has the similar expression of fol hardement for temerity or imprudence. Chaucer uses folehardiness for rashness. Mad rashness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A false glossing parasite would — call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blind.

South, Scrm. ii. 347.

FOOLHA'RDISE.* n. s. [fool and hardiesse, French.]

Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgement. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wise in works he was,

And reason with foolhardise over-ran;

Stern melancholy did his courage pass,

And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass.

Spenser, F. Q.

FOOLHA'RDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgement; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child

Did come too near, and with his talons play,

Half dead through fear, her little babe revild. Spenser, F. Q.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Howell.

If any yet be so foolhardy,

To expose themselves to vain jeopardy;

If they come wounded off, and lame,

No honour's got by such a main.

Hudibras.

FOO'LTRAP. n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.

Betts, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wise

Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies.

Dryden.

FOO'LISH. adj. [from fool.]

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

Thou foolish woman, seest thou not our mourning? 2 Esdr.

Pray do not mock me;

I am a very foolish fond old man:

I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.

We are come off

Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,

Nor cowardly in retire.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.

It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.

What could the head perform alone,

If all their friendly aids were gone?

A foolish figure he must make;

Do nothing else but sleep and ake.

Prior.

He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself. Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.

FOO'LISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our winter sun looks bright,

And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;

Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.

FOO'LISHNESS. n. s. [from foolish.]

1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,

And shape my foolishness to their desire.

Prior.

FOO'LSCAP Paper.* A term denoting the size of the sheet of paper; as pot, foolscap, &c. pot being the smallest, and foolscap the second in the ascending scale to atlas-paper.

FOO'LSTONES. n. s. A plant.

FOOT.† n. s. plural feet. [For, Saxon; voet, Dutch; fute, Scottish; fotus, Goth. fot, Iceland. "Antiquissimam esse vocem comprobatur omnium dialect. Scytho-Scand. convenientia." Serenius.]

1. The part upon which we stand.

The queen that bore thee,

Of't'ner upon her knees than on her feet,

Died ev'ry day she liv'd.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deserted it till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot: as, the foot of a table.

3. The lower part; the base.

Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops, and sides, and feet of mountains.

Hakewill on Providence.

4. The end; the lower part.

What dismal cries are those?

— Nothing; a trifling sum of misery

New added to the foot of thy account.

Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryden, Cleomen.

5. The act of walking.

Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. 2 Mac. v. 21.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand, a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden, Æn.

In specifying the world Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England. Swift, Drap. Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.

I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the following phrase. See AFOOT.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon, Ess.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Did'st thou hear these verses?

— O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakspeare.
And Sidney's verse hants ill on Roman feet. Pope.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something lark on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard. L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches: supposed to be the length of a man's foot.

When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

To Foot. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.

Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his haste. Spenser, F. Q.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night.

Shakspeare.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself.

L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden, Span. Friar.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

To Foot. † v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakspeare.

For there the pride of all her heart will bow,
When you shall foot her from you, not she you. Beaumont and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What confed'acy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tuckell.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Herbert. He had forgotten Shakspeare.

The holy eagle

Stoop'd, as to foot us. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

5. To supply with feet.

New spur-leathers, or stockings by this time footed.
Rp. Hall, Charact. The Vain-Glorious.

FOOTBALL. n. s. [foot and ball.]

1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shakspeare.

Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

FOOTBANDS.* n. s. pl. [foot and band.] Soldiers that march and fight on foot.

T' whom valiant Audlie, in their faint recoyle,
With his foot-bands alone did give the foyle. Mir. for Mag. p. 805.

FOOTBOY. n. s. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber-door? Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle on Colours.
Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTBREADTH.* n. s. [foot and breadth.] The space which a foot might cover.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham, Sophy.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne. Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool. Stillingfleet.

FOP.† n. s. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Others think it derived from Horace's vappa, a foolish fellow; which is adopted from vappa, wine that has lost its flavour, evaporated. Sørenius proposes the Icelandic hvoða, levity.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,

Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company.

Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.

L'Estrange.

In a dultstream, which moving slow,

You hardly see the current flow.

When a small breeze obstructs the course,

It whirls about for want of force,

And in its narrow circle gathers

Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:

FOR

The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FO'POODLE. n. s. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.

FO'PLING.† n. s. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,

And, with his tailor, share the fopling's heart. Tickell.

Intrusion with a fopling's face,

Ignorant of time and place.

Grainger, Ode on Solitude.

FO'PPER.† n. s. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter

My sober house.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiliness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

And as my satire bursts amain,

See feather'd foppery strew the plain.

Shenstone.

Cambrics, lace, velvets, and many other prohibited fopperies. Guthrie.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France

Our fopperies of time, and mode of dance,

Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FO'PPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;

For wise men are grown foppish,

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;

The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;

The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;

The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet.

Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women.

Arbutnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

FO'PPISHLY.† adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

Sherwood.

FO'PPISHNESS.† n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

Sherwood.

I have seen parts of dress, in themselves extremely beautiful, which at the same time subject the wearer to the character of foppishness and affectation. Shenstone.

FOR.† prep. [fop, Saxon; voor, Dutch; faur, Gothick. Skinner and Tyrwhitt derive it from the Latin pro; Junius, from the Greek πρὸ; changing p into f; and transposing the letter r. Mr. Horne Tooke believes it to be no other than the Gothick substantive fairina, cause; and contends, that cause is the real single meaning which belongs to the several instances adduced. See Div. of Purley, i. 367—390.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakespeare.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

The governour, sallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles, Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham, Sophy, Prol.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickedest for hoping. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Bp. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryden, Virg.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shrick'd for the downfal in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shakespeare, Coriol.

A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poesy was,
For all the world, like cutlers' poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shakespeare.

For all the world,
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Ess.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon, Ess.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Ess.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; ther being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryden, Tyr. Love.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryden, En.

After death, we sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate, Jew.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually tops them. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

Lo, some are vellum, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Maraudus the general, they had no just cause to dislike him, being an old captain of great experience. Knolles.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,
I, in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay.

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd. Milton, P. R.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton, P. L.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon.

He refused not to die for those that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it. Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd? Dryden, Span. Friar.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics must consult in;
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling. Swift.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate. Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it. Addison, Spect.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru, for China and Japan. Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven. Hayward.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

10. In comparative respect.

For tasks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryden.

11. In proportion to.

FOR

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition ;
so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

12. With appropriation to.

Shadow will serve for summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster book.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

13. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakespeare, Hen. V. Prologue.

14. In account of; in solution of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

15. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.

Tillotson.

16. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.

Locke.

17. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors.

Bp. Taylor.

18. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by.

Boyle on Colours.

19. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should whither as needeth for burning in mow.

Tusser.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
In this self place.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There must be no alleys with hedges at the hither end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green: nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

Bacon, Ess.

Walk off, sirrah,

And stir my horse for catching cold.

Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

20. In remedy of.

Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach.

Garretson.

21. In exchange of.

He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry.

Dryden.

22. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line is impossible.

Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star.

Cowley.

23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.

Dryden.

24. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please.

Roscommon.

Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it.

Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens.

Addison, Rem. on Italy.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing

Successive conquests, and a glorious king;

And bring him laurels, whatso'er they cost.

Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay

To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day,

Garth, Ovid.

25. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.

Tillotson.

FOR

26. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.

Boyle.

27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Shakespeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke.

Dryden.

28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,

Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achiev'd gold:

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,

In words worth dying for, he celebrate.

Cowley.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,

Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays.

Denham.

There we shall see, a sight worthy dying for, that blessed
Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.

Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.

Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name;

In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,

I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,

And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart.

Dryden, Virg.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;

But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden.

Let them, who truly would appear my friends,

Employ their swords like mine for noble ends.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

29. Of tendency to; towards.

The kettle to the top was hoist;

But with the upside down, to show

Its inclination for below.

Swift.

30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hooker, Pref.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife.

Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Bp. Smalridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.

Dennis.

They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Felton.

31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,

Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,

That she thinks nothing else so fit for me.

Donne.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean.

Addison on Italy.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Felton.

32. With intention of.

And by that justice hast remov'd the cause

Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent

Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Waller.

Here huntsmen with delight may read

How to chuse dogs for scent or speed.

Waller.

God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of.

Tillotson, Serm.

FOR

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are coursers driv'n, who shed their master's blood. Dryden.
Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for? Locke.
Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector. Broome, View of Epick Poem.

33. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakspeare, Othello.
Th' offers he doth make,
We're not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Knolles.
Jests for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.
Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command! Dryden, Æn.
His sire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden, Æn.
It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.

34. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Hooker.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene. Decay of Piety.
Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South.
For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift, Drap. Letters.
If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

35. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill, •
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.
Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson.

36. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills, and stem the flood. Dryden.

37. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden, Pers.
First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryden, Virg.

38. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakspeare.
As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition;
so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden, Juv.

39. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone;
and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson.

40. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakspeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison, Spect.

41. For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprise. Sidney.

FOR

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolles, Hist.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew she footing found for all the flood. Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgement. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the em-perour of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over such businesses; but my rubble is not to be wumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

42. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Spenser, F. Q.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

FOR. † conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit?

For the first matter loves variety loss. Cowley.
Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

I would go forward in this course of seeking hard places and phrases in authors, but for that I have now much other business that nearer concerns me. Minshew, Span. Gramm. (1599) p. 82.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakspeare, Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakspeare, Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any further provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon, War with Spain.

For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God of his goodness to give you safe deliverance, and hath preserved you in the great danger of child-birth, you shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God. Common Pr. Churching of Women.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that. In its oldest acceptation, wherefore. [Sax. for-phi.]

For whi tho thingis that ye hañ seid in derknessis, shulen be seid in light. Wickliffe, St. Luke, xii. 3.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperour into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

FOR.* In composition for is sometimes privative, as, forbear, and forbid, in its fourth meaning; sometimes merely intensive, as forbathe; and sometimes only communicative of an ill sense, as for-swear.

To FORAGE.† v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this word, except that, under the substantive, he adduces the Germ. fouirage, and Fr. fouirage; to which may be added the low Lat. foragium. Serenius derives forage from the Ital. fodr, as Du Cange derives fouirage from the low Latin fodrum, fodder; Sax. forþe; whence foderare, forrare, and thus perhaps forage. See also FORAGER.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use. Forage, and run

To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him ere he come so nigh. Shakespeare, K. John.

2. To wander in search of spoil; generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden, Virg.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To Fo'RAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.
They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

FO'RAGE. n. s. [fouirage, Germ. fouirage, French.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton, P. L.

2. Provisions sought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden, Georg.

3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryden, Fab.

FO'RAGER.* n. s. [from forage; low Lat. fodrarius, forarius, whence also our obsolete word forriour, or fouurier, as in the Vis. of P. Plowman; "Kynde Conscience — sent forth his forriours, fevers and fluxes." See To FORAGE.]

1. One who wanders in search of spoil; "a waster of a country." Hudoe.

Preensies and foul evil, foragers of Kynde.

Down so smooth a slope,
The fleecy foragers will gladly browse. Mason, English Garden.

FORA'MINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To FORBA'THE.* v. a. [for and bathe.] To bathe; to imbue.

With conquerors' hands forbath'd in their own blood.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

To FORBE'AR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [forþæran, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation: as, for-swear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance. Chaucer.

2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company, therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
He forbare to go forth. 1 Sam. xxiii. 13.

At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Dryden, Juv.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.
By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.

To FORBE'AR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.
Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.
If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

FOR

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. s. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakespeare.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

* Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding; but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison, Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. s. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East, a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.

To FORBID.† v. a. pret. I forbade, and formerly forbid; part. forbidden or forbid. [popbeodan, Sax. verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

It is

The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakespeare.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,

Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race

Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden, Æn.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbade him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The plaister alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!

O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse. [German, verbieten; Su. Goth. forþbiuda;

To interdict.]

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid;

That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare, Coriol.

FOR

FORBIDDANCE.† n. s. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

Commands do not so much whet our desires as forbiddances.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 27.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton, P. L.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly.
Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

FORBIDDENNESS.* n. s. [from forbidden.] The state of being forbidden.

The sinfulness of swearing does consist, not in the diversity of our oaths, but in their forbiddenness.

Boyle against Customary Swearing, p. 37.

FORBIDDER. n. s. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder. Milton, P. L.

FORBIDDING. part. adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragely was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hall.

FORBIDDING.* n. s. [from forbid.] Hindrance; opposition.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, that wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Whom, and her race, only forbiddings drive.

Donne, Progress of the Soul.

FORBY.* See FOREBY.

FORCE.† n. s. [Su. Goth. fors, vehemence; old Fr. force, strength; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour: might; active power.

Swift, Examiner.
The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broome, View of Epick Poem.
2. To overpower by strength.
O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton, S. A.
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch and insult the court. Dryden, Æn.
3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.
Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deut. xx. 19.
Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply buried, lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden, Æn.
4. To enforce; to urge.
Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gathering to the shore. Dryden, Æn.
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never scere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Milton, Lycidas.
5. To drive by violence or power.
This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piet.
To free the ports, and ope the Punick land
To Trojan guests, lest, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state.
Dryden.
6. To gain by violence or power.
My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.
7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.
Troy wall'd so high,
Atides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dareboldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.
8. To ravish; to violate by force.
Force her. — I like it not. Dryden.
9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.
With these forc'd thoughts, I pry'thee, darken not
The mirth o' the feast. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit,
and forced conceits. Addison, Spect.
10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers, to garrison.
Here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard. Shakespeare.
If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh, Apology.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther's expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.
- To FORCE.† v. n.
1. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Mason adds another.
That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change crown from a duke to a king. Camden, Rem.
I force? not I, so the villaine were dead. New Custom.
2. To endeavour.
Forcing with gifts to win his wanton heart.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

And now he strength gan add unto his will,
Forcing, to do that did him foul misseem
Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 26.
- FO'RCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrain- edly; unnaturally.
This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet, Theory.
- FO'RCEDNESS.* n. s. [from force.] Distortion. See the ninth sense of To FORCE.
Against the forcedness and incongruity of this sense much might be said. Worthington on the Millennium, p. 2.
- FO'RCFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.
Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forcful instigation. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Against the steed he threw
His forcful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden, Æn.
Were it by chance or forcful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
He pois'd in air, the javelin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forcful weapon went. Pope.
- FO'RCFULLY. adv. [from forcful.] Violently; im- petuously.
- FO'RCLESS.† adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me.

1. A compeller; a constrainer; a subduer; a conqueror.

Cotgrave.

2. That which forces, drives, or constrains.

3. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers.

Wilkins, Dædalus.

FORCIBLE. † adj. [from force; Fr. forceable, Cotgrave.]

1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent

With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies.

Milton, P. L.

2. Violent; impetuous.

A most eager and forceable tyranné, [tyrant.]

Martin, Marr. of Pricels, (1554), sign. A. a. iii.

Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel

The influence of a form and mind,

Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,

Like mingled streams, more forcible when join'd:

Jersey shall at thy altars stand,

Shall there receive the azure band.

Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words?

Job.

God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder.

Raleigh, Hist.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far

Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,

And in embraces forcible and foul

Ingend'ring with me.

Milton, P. L.

Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire

Into the castle enter'd forcibly.

Spenser, F. Q.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital.

Bacon, Hcn. VII.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle.

Hammond.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind.

Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters.

Derham.

FORCIPATION. n. s. [Lat. forceps.] The act of squeezing or tearing with pincers; formerly a mode of punishment.

A punishment of less torment far than either the wheel, or forcipation, yea, than simple burning.

Bacon, Observ. on a Libel in 1592.

FORCING. n. s. [from force.]

1. The act of urging or chfforcing.

The forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife. Prov. xxx. 33.

2. Compulsion.

No doubt you may compel her;

But what a mischievous, unhappy fortune

May wait upon this will of your's, as commonly

Such forcings ever end in hates and ruins!

Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

TO FORCLOSE. n. s. See TO FORECLOSE.

FORD. † n. s. [popr, Saxon, from fapan, to pass; fford, Welsh, a passage, a way.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Jacob passed over the ford Jabbok.

Gen. xxxii. 22.

They took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over.

Judg. iii. 28.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;

They pass the stream, when she had found the ford.

Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards

The ford, and of itself the water flies

All taste of living wight.

Milton, P. L.

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd

Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:

But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord.

Dryden.

TO FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean.

Raleigh, Hist.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.

Denham.

FORDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitz upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable.

Raleigh, Hist.

A countryman sounded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise.

L'Estrange.

TO FORDO. n. s. [Sax. fordon, to waste, to destroy.]

Dr. Johnson has given this ancient word as foredo, with a pretended derivation from for and do; but the Saxon fordo is the true word. It is one of our oldest verbs, part. fordone. Yet Mr. Horne Tooke, as Dr. Jamieson also notices, has strangely interpreted Chaucer's usage of it by "forth-don", i. e. done to go forth, or caused to go forth, i. e. out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors!" Divers. of Purley, i. 495. This he gives as an illustration of the adverb forth. Johnson might have laughed at this, as much as Mr. Tooke has thought proper to laugh at some of Johnson's wanderings. It is clearly ruined, undone.]

1. To ruin; to destroy: opposed to making happy.

A word obsolete.

I see no more but that I am fordo:

Min heritage mote I nede sell,

And be a beggar; here I nill not dwell.

Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

Beseeching him with prayer, and with praise,
If either salves, or oils, or herbs, or charms,

FOR

A fordonne wight from dore of death mote raise,
He would at her request prolong her husband's daies.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 41.

This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did, with desperate hand,
Fordo its own life. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

This is the night,
That either makes me, or fordoes me quite. Shakspeare, Othello.
He hath commision from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid herself. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. To weary; to overcome.
The heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fordone. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

FORE. adj. [pope, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.
Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression. Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.
Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv. [formerly forne, Sax. forne.]

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft,
which is a slight deck throughout. Ralegh, Ess.

2. For is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, or situation; of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

3. Fore and aft. The whole length of a ship.

To FOREADMO'NISH. v. a. [fore and admonish.] To counsel before the event.

Foreadmonishing him of dangers future and invisible.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 12.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [for and advise.] To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,

As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To FOREALLE'GE. v. a. [fore and allège.] To mention or cite before.

Seneca, in the forealleged place, sets it peremptorily down as his resolute opinion, that the excellentest wit that ever was, yet cannot get to excel in any more than in one thing.

Fotherby, Atheom. p. 192.

Good authors make it justly questionable, whether these fore-alleged marriages should be deservedly charged with a sin.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [fore and appoint.]
To order beforehand.

Sherwood.

FOREAPPOINTMENT. n. s. [from foreappoint.] Pre-ordination; predestination. Sherwood.

To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care

With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryden, Æn.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [Sax. forebodian.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.
An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore;

My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryden.

FOR

My soul forboded I should find the bower
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous power.

Pope.

FOREBO'DER. n. s. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBO'DEMENT. n. s. [from forebode.] Used by Dr. Johnson in defining presagement. See PRE-SAGEMENT.

FOREBO'DING. n. s. [from forebode.] Presage; perception beforehand.

The atheists can never wholly extinguish those horrible forebodings of conscience. Bentley, Serm. I.

The melancholy forebodings of incomprehensible misery and ruin. A. Smith, Theor. of Mor. Sent. ii. 2.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

To FORECAST. v. a. [fore and cast.]

1. To scheme; to plan before execution.

He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds.

Dan. xi.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.

The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,

That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,

The fiend's alarm began. Dryden, Theod. and Honor.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark,
and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange.

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom

Ordnained have, how can frail fleshy wight

Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser, F. Q.

When broad awake, she finds in troublous fit,

Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Spenser, F. Q.

FO'RECAST. n. s. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan: antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,

But while he thought to steal the single ten,

The king was slyly finger'd from the deck!

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and pre-determination of the gods. Addison on Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:

Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;

That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FO'RECASTER. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RECASTLE. n. s. [fore and castle.] The name perhaps, as a learned friend thinks, originates from the circumstance of ships of war having formerly parapets, and battlements, like land-fortifications, with small castles built fore and aft. In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head:
that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the pro. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Ralegh, Ess.

FORECHOSEN. part. [for and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

Greaves is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FOR

To FORECLOSE.† v. a. [not from fore and close, as Dr. Johnson asserts; but from the old Fr. forclos, which is the participle of the verb forclorre, to exclude. See Kelham and Lacombe. It is probably the Latin, foras cludere, to shut the doors. Our word is, in old writings, forclose.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.

They are forclosed from the ministration.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. C. i. B.

But greenish waves, and heavie lowering skies,
All comfort else forclosed our exil'd eyes. Mir. for Mag. p. 415.
The embargo with Spain forclosed this trade. Carew.

2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

The mortgagee may call upon the mortgager to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof to be for ever forclosed from redeeming the same. Blackstone.

FORECLOSURE.* n. s. [from forclorre.] A deprivation of the power of redeeming a mortgage. A law term.

To FORECONCEIVE.* v. n. To preconceive.

Expecting or foreconceiving, that Nemesis and retribution will take hold of the authors of our hurt. Bacon.

FOREDATED.* part. [from fore and date.] Dated before the true time.

An abortive and foredated discovery.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

FOREDECK. n. s. [from fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look

For rocky Scylla.

Chapman, Odyssey.

To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [from fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

To FOREDETERMINE.* v. a. [from fore and determine.]

To decree beforehand.

When we ascribe power unto God, "Thine is the power," we attribute unto him a power that is infinite, a power which can effect whatsoever his will hath fore-determined.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 176.

To FOREDO.† See To FORDO.

To FOREDOOM.† v. a. [from fore and doom. Sax. poppe-doman.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden, Æn.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen oit the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FOREDOOM.* n. s. [Sax. poppe-doman, to judge.] Judgment.

And Jove's unmoved sentence and foredoom
On Priam king, and on his town so bent,
I could not lin but I must there lament.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FOREDOOR.* n. s. [Sax. poppe-dupe.] A door in the front of a house.

FOREELDER.* n. s. [from fore and elder. Sax. poppealsian, to grow old.] An ancestor; a common word in the north of England.

FOREEND. n. s. [from fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakspeare, Cymb.

FOR

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon, New Atlantis.

FOREFATHER. n. s. [from fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.

Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh, Hist.

Conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief; mine is not so.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefather's joints? Shakspeare.

Our great forefathers

Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison, on Italy.

Hest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFEIND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and feind. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefeind! I would not kill thy soul. Shakspeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefeind,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefeind,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

FOREFINGER. n. s. [from fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate-stone

On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Polynnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham on Drawing.

Some wear this on the middlefinger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown.

FOREFOOT. n. s. plur. forefeet. [from fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet.

2 Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacham on Drawing.

FOREFRONT.* n. s. [from fore and front; "foreside of a house, façade, Fr." Sherwood.] The anterior front of any thing.

Thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon the forefront of the mitre it shall be.

Exod. xxviii. 37.

Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle.

2 Sam. xi. 15.

The forefront of the house stood toward the east.

Exod. xlvii. 1.

That temple had two parts; first, the forefront, the porch, the walk before it; and secondly, the temple itself.

Hales, Rom. p. 131.

FOR

FO'REGAME.* n. s. [fore and game.] A first plan; a first game.

Since life is but as a game at tables, if the foregame be not to thy wish, neither whine nor curse; but rouse thy care to an aftergame. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 29.

To FOREGO.† v. a. [for and go. Sax. forþgan. In the first sense the word should be written, as Spenser writes it, forgo.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humbled foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forgo.

Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor forgone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser on Ireland.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay forgone;

And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wearen none.

Spenser, F. Q.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?

Shakespeare.

Let us not forego

That for a trifle which was bought with blood.

Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn!

Milton, P. L.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden, Juv. Dedie.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not.

Shakespeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.
This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden; Dufresnoy.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs.

Woodward.

3. To lose. Dr. Johnson has here cited a passage from Shakespeare's Hamlet, where the word is not foregoes, but fords, i. e. destroys.

FO'REGOER.† n. s. [from forego.]

1. Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,

When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers.

Shakespeare, All's well.

2. One who goes before another.

O Mercury, foregoer to the evening! Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

3. A forsaker; a quitter.

Cotgrave in V. Abandonneur.

FO'REGROUND. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field. Dryden.

To FOREGUESS.* v. n. [fore and guess.] To conjecture. Sherwood.

FOREHAND. n. s. [fore and hand.]

FOR

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sipew and the forehand of our host.

Shakespeare.

FO'REHAND. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin.

Shakespeare.

FOREHAND'D. n. s. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehand'd care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forchanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapen too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD.† n. s. [fore and head. Sax. forpeheapob.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And molded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.

Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

Here, see the forehead of a Jesuit!

Bp. Hall, Hom. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 61.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

To FOREHEAR.* v. n. [fore and hear.] To be informed before. With of.

The Turks, whom they account for barbarous,
Having foreheard of Basilisco's worth,
A number underprop me with their shoulders.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

To FOREH'ND.* v. a. [fore and hend. See To HEND.] To seize. The early editions of Spenser read forhend; but forehend is right, meaning, in the following passage, taken before she can escape.

Like as a fearful dove —
Having farro off espyde a tassell gent,
Which after her his nimble wings doth strain,
Doubleth her haste for fear to be forehent,
And with her pinions leaves the liquid firmament.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 49.

To FOREHEW.* v. a. [fore and hew.] To cut in front.

His face forehew'd with wounds.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FOREHOLDING. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives' tales!

L'Estrange.

FO'REHORSE.* n. s. [fore and horse.] The foremost horse of a team.

As if

We were two carriers at two several ways,
And, as the fore-horse guides, cry God be with you.

Beaumont and Fl. Coxcomb.

FOR

The forchorse gingles on the road,
The waggoner lugs on his load. Cotton, Morning Quat. st. 18.
FO'REIGN. adj. [forain, Fr. forano, Spanish;
from foras, Lat.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts.

Milton.
The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison, Frecholder.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison, Cato.
Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition.

Addison.
This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.
Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so grieved him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

FO'REIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham, Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son. Dryden, Rn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch;
but the lemon, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison, Frecholder.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater luster, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness;
want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

TO FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden, Rem.

TO FOREJUDGE. † v. a. [fore and judge; old
Fr. forjuger.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to prejudice. Sherwood.

FOREJUDGEMENT.  n. s.* [fore and judgement.] Judgement formed beforehand. Sherwood.

But seldom seen, forejudgement proveth right.
Spenser, Muopotmos, v. 320.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee,

FOR

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Balegh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.
Dryden, Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNO'WABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. More, Divine Dialogues.

FOREKNO'WER.  n. s.* [from foreknow.] He who knows what is to happen.

He will make God the foreknower—of evil.
Stapleton, Fortn. of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 41. b.

FOREKNO'WLEDGE. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Pre-science; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknow- ledge of that too, and therefore chooses to speak with you.
Shakespeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton, P. L.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FO'RELAND. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory;
headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skillful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milton, P. L.

TO FORELAY. † v. a. [fore and lay, Dr. Johnson says. It is in the first meaning the Teut. ver- laeghen; and our own word was formerly, and should be always, in the sense of laying wait for, written forlay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush.
Some secret detractor hath forlaid thee by a whispering misintimation. Seasonable Serm. (1644.) p. 30.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrills the brake.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

2. To contrive antecedently; to prevent. [fore and lay.]

That our serious humiliations may forelay his too well deserved judgements. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

FORELEADER.  n. s.* [fore and leader.] One who leads others by his example.

Would God that we learned not, by the foreleaders before named, to charge and conjure each other unto the pledge!
Gascoigne, Diet for Drunkards, (1576.)

TO FO'RELEND.  v. a.* [fore and lend.] To give beforehand. Not in use.

As if that life to loss they had fo'rlent.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 6.

TO FO'RELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any antierour part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of new comen guest. Spenser, F. Q.

FORELOCK. n. s. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take.

Spenser.

Hyacinthine locks

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad.

Milton, P. L.

Zeal and duty are not slow,

But on occasion's forelock watchful wait.

Milton, P. R.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it.

Swift.

TO FORELO'OK.* v. n. [fore and look.] To see beforehand.

Then did I forelook,

And saw this day mark'd white in Glotho's book.

B. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

FOREMAN. n. s. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.

Addison, Spect.

FOREMAST.* n. s. [fore and mast.] The first mast of a ship towards the head.

FOREMAST MAP.* n. s. One that furls the sails, and takes his course at the helm.

Chambers.

FOREME'ANT.* part. [fore and mean.] Intended beforehand.

As being the place by destiny foremeant.

B. Jonson, Masques.

FOREME'NTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementimed figure on the pillar.

Addison on Italy.

FOREMOST.† adj. [from fore. Sax. forpmyrt.]

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.

Sidney.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistress there.

Dryden.

The bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,
As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness.

Addison, Cato.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held.

Dryden.

FOREMOSTLY.* adv. [from foremost.] Among the foremost.

But when he saw his daughter dear
Coming on most foremostly;
He wrung his hands, and tore his hair,
And cried out most piteously.

Old Ballad of Jephthah, Percy's Rel. i. ii. 3.

FOREMOTHER.* n. s. [fore and mother.] A female ancestor.

I would have you my daughters, so to look to your feet, when you enter into the house of God, that your devotions through irreverent unseemliness prove not the sacrifice of fools. It was the modesty and humility of some of your fore-mothers not to seat themselves in the church, before they had performed a reverent respect to the minister then officiating.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 58.

FORENA'MED. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

And such are sure ones,

As Curius and the forenamed Lentulus.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

FORENOON. n. s. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, till either the strangers or the country knights won the field.

Sidney.

Cutio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

FORENO'TICE. n. s. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it.

Rymer on Tragedy.

FORENSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness.

Locke.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes.

Watts on the Mind.

TO FOREORDA'IN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predestinate; to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance, by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks.

Hooker.

FOREORDINA'TION.* n. s. [fore and ordination.] Predetermination.

Whether this foreordination were in St. Jude's intent, or meaning a foreordination from eternity.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 171.

FO'REPART. n. s. [fore and part.]

To FORESEIZE.* v. a. [fore and seize.] To grasp beforehand.

Proceed, illustrious, happy chief, proceed; Foreseize the garlands for thy brow decreed. Tate, Abs. and Archipel.

To FORESHADOW.* v. a. [fore and shadow.] To foreshignify; to typify.

That the great excellency and efficacy of our Saviour's death and passion might appear, it was by manifold types foreshadowed and in diverse prophecies foretold. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 17.

To FORESHAME.* v. a. [fore and shame.] To shame; to bring reproof upon. Dr. Johnson brings an example from Shakspeare's Cymbeline, where the word is not foreshaming but sore-shaming.

To FORESHE'W.† v. a. [Sax. poþe-ƿceapian. Yet our word, in modern times, is written foreshow.] To predict; to represent before it comes. See To FORESHOW.

The dreams that troubled them did foreshew this.
Wisdom, xviii. 17.

Oh, that same drawing in your nether lip there,
Foreshews no goodness, lady. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

FORESHE'W.* n. s. [from the verb.] A sign; that by which any thing is foreshown.

With vermeil drops at ev'n his tresses bleed,
Foreshews of future heat. Fairfax, Tass. xiii. 54.

FORESHE'WER.* n. s. [from foreshew.] One who predicts a thing.

FORESHO'RTENING.* n. s. [from foreshorten.] The act of shortening figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreshortenings, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

To FORESHO'W. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshowed. Hooker.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,
Whose purple blush the day foreshows. Denham.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshotted? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker.

FO'RESIDE.* n. s. [fore and side.] Superficial appearance; outside.

Now when these counterfeiters were thus uncased
Out of the foreside of their forgerie, —
All gan to jest and gibe full merlie. Spencer, F. Q. v. iii. 59.

FORESIGHT. n. s. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers.

FORESI'GHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney.

To FORESI'GNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To be-token beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

FOR

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hooker.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton, P. R.

FO'RESKIN. n. s. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.
Their own hand

An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,
And for a dower their hundred foreskins pay;
'Be Michol thy reward. Cowley, Davidic.

FO'RESKIRT. n. s. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To FORESLA'CK.† v. a. [fore and slack.] Spenser writes it forslack in the Fairy Queen.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser on Ireland.

To FORESLO'W.† v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.
No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

'Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train;
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

If they be any time foreslowed and trashed by either outward or inward restraints. Hammond, Works, iv. 565.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bp. Hall.

Chronis, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats, and use their nets aright;
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan,
That few were such; and now these few are none.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iv. 12.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreslow no longer, make we hence amain.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

To FORESPE'AK.† v. n. [fore and speak. Sax. poþe-ƿæcan.]

1. To predict; to foresay; to foreshow; to foretell.
My mother was half a witch; never any thing that she forespoke, but came to pass. Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

2. To forbid. [From for and speak.]

Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. To bewitch. This is a very ancient sense of the word, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. "For-spoken or charmen." Ort. Vocab. "To fore-speak, to bewitch." Barrret's Alv.

Urging

That my bad tongue, by their bad usage made so,
Forespake their cattle, doth bewitch their corn.

Rowley, Decker, and Ford's Witch of Edmonton.

Or to forespeak whole flocks as they did feed.

Drayton, Epist. from El. Cobham to Duke Humphry.

1. A prediction.

Old Godfrey of Winchester thinketh no ominous forespeak- ing to lie in names. Camden, Rem.

2. A prefacc; a forespeech. Huloet.

FO'RSPEECH.* n. s. [Sax. forpe-ppæc.] A prefacc; something spoken introductory to the main design.
Sherwood.

FORESPE'NT. adj.

1. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? Spenser, F. Q.

You shall find his vanities forespent,

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Bestowed before.

We must receive him

According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakspeare.

3. Wasted; tired; spent. [for and spent.]

After him came spurring hard

A gentleman, almost forespent with speed.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

FORESPU'RRER. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,

To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord, Shakspeare.

FOREST.† n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.
So far Dr. Johnson. He might have added the Welsh fforest. The many derivations of this word are also too curious to be overpassed. Menage derives it from the Low Latin foresta; a word, which first occurs in the capitulars of Charlemagne; and Vossius deduces that from the German forst, i. e.
de foris, meaning that forests are out of or beyond towns: Spelman from foris and restare, with the same inference: Others from foris and stare, meaning a place, says Cotgrave, "whereto the access or entry is forbidden to others:" Others from feris,
i. e. ferarum statio, a station for wild beasts. See Du Cange in V. FORESTA. The last seems the most probable etymology. In the Black Book of the Exchequer, foresta is feresta, with a view, as it has been supposed, to this derivation.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot choose but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macheth shall never vanquish'd be, until

Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill

Shall come against him.

That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but gras-ing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.
The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these:

a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest;
the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regardless, bailiffs, and beadles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair.

Cowel.

FO'REST.* adj. [Ital. foresto, agrestis.] Sylvan; rustick.

In a lodge, or forest house.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 118.

FO'RESTAFF.* n. s. [fore and staff.] An instrument used at sea for taking the altitudes of heavenly bodies. See CROSS-STAFF.

FO'RESTAGE.* n. s. [Fr. forestage; low Lat. fore- stagium.] An ancient service paid by foresters to the king; also, the right of foresters.

To FORESTA'LL.† v. a. [forestallan, Saxon, i. e.
fope, before, and real, station. In Domesday Book forestal is an obstructing a person in the highway, an intercepting or stopping in the road.
A forestaller, stopping the articles coming to market, hence took his disreputable name.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will, Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid? Milton, Comus.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall. Spenser, F. Q.

What's in prayer, but this twofold forte

To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But for my tears,

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If thou covet death, as utmost end

Of misery, so thinking to evade

The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God

Hath wellsell'd arm'd his vengeful ire, than so

To be forestall'd.

I will not forestall your judgement of the rest. Milton, P. L.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,

Abandon this forestalled place at erst,

For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Spenser, F. Q.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of. Not now in use.

May

This night forestall him of the coming day.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Perhaps forestalling night prevented them. Milton, Comus.

FORESTA'LLER. n. s. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of engrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FOR

FORESTBORN. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 1.

FORESTER.† n. s. [forestier, French; forestarius, low Lat.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we may stand and play the murderer in?
— Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppice. Shakespeare.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

Foresters and borderers are not generally so civil and reasonable, as might be wished. Evelyn, iii. vii. § 3.

3. One who understands the nature and the laws of forests.

You are cried up, my lord, to be an excellent horseman, huntsman, forester. Howell, Lett. to Ld. Lindsey, iv. 16.

The greatest forester, they say, that ever was in England, was king Canutus the Dane; and after him, St. Edward; at which time Liber Rufus, the Red-Book for Forest-Laws was made. Ibid.

4. A forest-tree.

This niceness is more conspicuous in flowers, and the herbaceous offspring, than in foresters. Evelyn.

FORESWAT. } adj. [of for and wat, from sweat.]

FORESWART. } Spent with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

TO FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton, P. L.

FORETASTE. n. s. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

FORETASTER.* n. s. [from foretaste.] One that tastes before another. Sherwood.

TO FORETEACH.* v. a. [fore and teach.] To teach before; to inculcate foretime. Mr. Upton reads, in the following passage, fortaught, making it a verb, with the meaning of misinterpreted, or wrongly and wicked taught; but it is a participle agreeing with hest or commandments. Spenser himself reads foretaught.

And underneath his filthy feet did tread
The sacred things, and holy heastes foretaught.
Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 18.

TO FORETELL.† v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I found
The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton, P. L.

Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven seal'd my word and you those deeds behold. Pope.

FOR

2. To foretold; to foreshow.

These ill prophetic signs have oft foretold.

Dr. Warton, Virgil.

TO FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Acts, iii. 24.

FORETELLER. n. s. [from foretell.] Predicter; foreshower.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee them.

Boyle on Colours.

FORETELLING.* n. s. [from foretell.] A declaration of something future.

These predictions are very rare foretellings, wont to be lapped in obscure folds. Feltham, Resolv. i. § 2.

TO FORETHINK.† v. a. [fore and think. Sax. fope-ðincan.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom

Forethought by heav'n. Shakespeare, K. John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bp. Hall.

TO FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:

What then is time? Thou cool deliberate villain!

Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician! Smith.

FORETHOUGHT.† n. s. [from forethink. Sax. fope-ðonc.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

Devises by last will and testament are always more favoured in construction, than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, forethought, and advice. Blackstone.

FORETHOUGHT.* adj. Propense.

The second is, where a man is slain upon forethought malice, which the law terms murder.

Bacon, Charge at the Sess. of the Verge.

FORETOKEN.† n. s. [Sax. fope-tacn.] Preventive sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretold of misfortune. Sidney.

They disliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretold of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden, Rem.

TO FORETOKEN.† v. a. [from the noun. Sax. fope-tacnian.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;

Whilst strange prodigious signs foretold blood. Daniel.

FORETOOTH. n. s. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.

FORETOP.† n. s. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig. So far Dr. Johnson, who cites Dryden in proof of this definition. It equally meant, within remembrance, the top of men's hair fantastically frizzled or shaped; and was in former days also a male ornament, according to Ben Jonson.

F O R

Each after other came in statelie dance,
And nimble capring on the purple wave,
With loftie foretops did the welkin brave.

Mir. for Mag. p. 777.

You must first have an especial care so to wear your hat, that it oppress not confusedly this your predominant or foretop.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Fair trees, those comely foretops of the field,
Are cut to maintain head-tires. Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your dress. Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection
Fall'n into taint. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FO'WARD. n. s. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men.
1 Mac. ix. 11.

To FOREWA'RN.† v. a. [fore and warn. Sax. forþþannan.]

1. To admonish beforehand.
I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which,
after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell.
St. Luke, xii. 5.

2. To inform previously of any future event.
Divine interpreter, by favour sent Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss Unknown. Milton, P. L.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.
Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton, P. L.

Though Phœbus had forewarned him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryden, Virg. Ded.

Young Chœrebus, who by love was led
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Prima's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetick maid. Dryden, Æn.

To FOREWA'STE.† v. a. See To FORWASTE.

To FOREWE'ARY.† v. a. See To FORWEARY.

To FOREWE'ND.* v. a. [fore and wend.] To go before.

And now they be to heaven forewent. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.
FO'REWIND.* n. s. [fore and wind.] A favourable wind; a wind that blows a vessel right forward in its course.

Long sail'd I on smooth seas, by forewinds borne.
Sandys, Job, p. 25.

To FOREW'ISH. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

FOREWO'RN. part. [for and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT.† n. s. [forfait, French, fforfed, Welsh. The word seems connected with the low Latin forisfacere, which, in old glossaries, is interpreted, to offend, to hurt; "forisfacere, quasi foris facere, i. e. extra rationem." Du Cange in voce.]

F O R

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeit. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

The execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton, S. A.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. Something deposited, and to be redeemed by a jocular fine, whence the game of forfeits; one of our festive sports, not yet forgotten; and observed, especially in the country, about Christmas time.

Some, haply, cards adopt;
Or if to forfeits they the sport confine,
The happy folk, adjacent to the fire,
Their stations take; excepting one alone
(Sometimes the social mistress of the house)
Who sits within the centre of the room,
To cry the pawns. R. J. Thorne's Christmas, (1795,) v. 289.

3. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

To FO'RFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Davies.
Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.
A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FO'RFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.

This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton, R. L.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden, Virg.
Methought with wondrous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour to betray the town. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
How the murderer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the flame! Pope, Odys.

FO'RFEITABLE.† adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

To the trackless deep they trust
Their forfeitable cargo. Crowe's Lewesdon Hill.

FO'RFEITER.* n. s. [from forfeit.] One who incurs punishment, by forfeiting his bond. Formerly printed, in the following passage, incorrectly, forfeiture.

Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FO'RFEITURE.† n. s. [forfaiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

His father's care,

That for the want of issue, took him home, (Though with the forfeiture of his own fame,) Will look unto his safety. Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon, War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,

He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORFEX. † n. s. [Latin.] A pair of scissors.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,
To enclose the lock; now joins it, to divide.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

FORGE'VE. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE. † n. s. [forge, French; probably corrupted from the Latin, fabrica, a shop or work-house. The Icel. fergia, however, is to compact or put together, and to press; and accordingly, Mr. Callander thinks that the name of a smith's forge may be thence derived.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

In other part stood one who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted.

Milton, P. L.

The o'er-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
The Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope, Statius.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

To FORGE. † v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg' of gold,

Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman, Hind.

These are still but sparks of odium and scorn, which fly from the vulgar anvils and hammers; which commonly both overhear, and overlabour, what they undertake to forge or reform. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 162.

If the substantial subject be well forged out, we need not examine the sparks which irregularly fly from it. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 2.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate, Jew.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakspeare, Coriol.

His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shakspeare.

Those names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or within the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FORGER. † n. s. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

Tough holly and smooth birch must altogether burn;
What should the builder serve, supplies the forger's turn.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 17.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Gov. of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. s. [from forge.]

1. The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?

And now, to sooth your forger and his,

Sends me a paper to persuade me patience.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of *forger*y. Stephens, Sermon.

A *forger*y, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

[He] ran on embattled armies clad in iron;

And, weaponless himself,

Made arms ridiculous, useless the *forger*y

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

Adamantan proof.

Milton, S. A.

To FORGE'T. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot. [forgetan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,

I never in my life did look on him. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,

And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention

Of me must more be heard. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unkindful of him in thy riches. Ecclesi. xxxvii. 6.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot

our danger and our duty.

Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot.

Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget;

yet will I not forget thee. Isaiah, xlix. 5.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of mean forgotten things.

Anon.

FORGETFUL. † adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

But didst thou tell me so?

I am forgetful.

Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

If the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benumma not still.

Milton, P. L.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,

So long their punishments and penance last,

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god

Compell'd to drink the deep Lethcean flood,

In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares

Of their past labours, and their irksome years. Dryden, Æn.

FOR

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Heb. xiii. 2.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful

In our long absence.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,

When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,

Makes me forgetful?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

I, in fact, a real interest have,

Which to my own advantage I would save;

And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend

To serve myself, forgetful of my friend.

Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,

That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,

And steep my senses in forgetfulness!

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;

And brings, descending through the silent air,

A sweet forgetfulness of human care.

Pope, Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty.

Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good oberrie sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapcs, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit.

Shakespeare.

FORGETTER. † n. s. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

I think her

A strange forgetter of herself.

Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

2. A careless person.

FORGETTING.  n. s.* [from forget.] Inattention; forgetfulness.

I am not willing to discover the forgettings of reverend men.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

FORGETTINGLY.  adv.* [from forgetting.] Without attention; forgetfully.

I fear I have (forgettingly) transgress'd

Against the dignity of the court.

B. Jonson, For.

FORGIVABLE.  adj.* [from forgive.] That may be pardoned.

Sherwood.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [from gifan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too!

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I do beseech your grace for charity;

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

— Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,

As I would be forgiven: I forgive all.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives.

Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.

Is. xxxiii. 24.

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place

Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,

That on my head all might be visited,

Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,

To me committed, and by me expos'd.

Milton, P. L.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

St. Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS. n. s. [from gifenneþe, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses.

Dan. ix. 9.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manas.

FOR

Exchange forgiveness with me noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me.

Shakespeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents.

South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Sprat.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness intercede

To stop the coming blow.

Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. s. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

TO FORGO.* See TO FOREGO.

FORGO'T.

FORGO'TTEN. } part. pass. of forget. Not remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten.

Deut. xxxi. 21.

Great Strafford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall.

Denham.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,

Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot.

Prior.

TO FORHA'IL.† [perhaps from the Sax. for-healban, to detain.] To draw, or distress; as the contemporary commentator on Spenser defines it. Not now in use.

All this long tale

Nought easeth the care that me doth forhaile.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept. v. 243.

TO FORHE'ND.* See TO FOREHEND.

FORINSECAL.* adj. [Lat. forinsecus, from without.]

Foreign; alien.

Submitting ourselves principally to forinsecal potentates and powers.

Surrender of the Monks of Bettlesden, 30. Hen. 8. Burnet.

TO FORISFAM'LIATE.* v. a. [Lat. foris and familia.]

To put a son in possession of land in the life-time of a father. A term of the civil law.

Provided the eldest son had not received a provision in lands from his father, or, as the civil law would call it, had not been forisfamiliated, in his life-time.

Blackstone.

FORK.† n. s. [from forca, Saxon; furca, Latin; ffurch,

Welsh; fourche, French. Our eating-forks were introduced late in the sixteenth or early in the seventeenth century. Beaumont and Fletcher ridicule a traveller by the title of fork-carving.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

They had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks.

1 Sam. xiii. 27.

At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tusser.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,

With forks and staves the felon to pursue,

Ran Coll our dog.

Dryden, Nun's Priest.

The laudable use of forks,

Brought into custom here, as they are in Italy.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.

Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

— Let it fall rather, though the fork invade

The region of my heart.

Shakespeare, R. Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, turning, and melting.

Addison on Metals.

4. A gibbet. [old Fr. fourc; Lat. furca.]

FOR

They had run through all punishments, and just scaped the fork. Butler, Rem. ii. 193.

To FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FORKEP. † adj. [from fork.]

1. Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakespeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches goar'd. Shakespeare, As you like it.
He would have spoke;
But hiss for hiss return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, P. L.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your maker with your forked tongue. Roscommon.

2. Having two or more meanings.

I oft have heard him say, how he admir'd
Men of your large profession, that could speak
To every cause, and things meer contraries,
Till they were hourse again, yet all be law;
That, with most quick agility, could turn,
And re-turn; make knots, and unto them;
Give forked counsel. B. Jonson, Fox.

FORKEDLY. † adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.
Sherwood.

FORKEDNESS. † n. s. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FORKHEAD. n. s. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.
It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,
Eftsoons it fled away, and might not where be seen.
Spenser, F. Q.

FORKINESS.  n. s.* [from forky.] A fork-like division.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FORKTAIL.  n. s.* A name given by English fishermen to a young salmon, in his fourth year's growth.

FORKY. † adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.
A forky staff we dext'rously applied.
Addison, Part of the third Aeneid.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play.
Pope, Messiah.

To FORLAY.* See To FORELAY.

To FORLEND.* See To FORELEND.

FORLO'RE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleopan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Spenser, F. Q.

That wretched world he gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loth, as thing forlore. Spenser, F. Q.
Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairfax.

FORLORN. † adj. [forlopon, from forleopan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forloren. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?

FOR

Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?

Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne? Spenser, Shep. Cal.
In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren. Kneller, Hist.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forloren! Milton, P. L.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this dear wood;
The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
Threats the forloren and wandering passenger. Milton, Comus.

My only strength and stay! forloren of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist? Milton, P. L.

Like a declining statesman, left forloren
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

The good old man, forloren of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dryden, Iliad.

Philomel laments forloren. Fenton.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpy'd, and forloren. Pope, Autumn.

2. Taken away. This sense shews that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost, Dr. Johnson says, citing the authority of Spenser. The older authority of Chaucer presents the verb in the sense of to lose.

Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorne,
Curseth the time that ever he was borne. Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

When as night hath us of light forloren,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.

What is become of great Alerates' son?
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forloren, and all his glory done? Spenser, F. Q.

3. Small; despicable; in a ludicrous sense.
He was so forloren, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FORLO'RN. † n. s.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken person.

Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forloren. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Advise, whether I shall, or ought to be, prevailed upon, by the importunities of my own sex, to give way to the importunities of yours. I assure you I am surrounded with both, though at present a forloren. Taller, No. 210.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed or expected to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forloren of wit. Dryden.

If death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forloren hope, for the cannon's mouth. Hammond, Works, iv. 522.

FORLO'RNNESS. † n. s. [Sax. forloponen.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlorenness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

Our natives without a foreign degeneracy, without an importation, of sin could never have been guilty to such a forlorenness, could never have designed such contradictions to religion and nature. Mannyngham, Disc. p. 154.

To FORLYE. v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldrick, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed their places only signify'd. Spenser, F. Q.

FORM. † n. s. [forma, Latin; forme, French; by metathesis, from the Dorick μappa, as some contend; the past part. of the Sax. fremman, to make, according to Mr. H. Tooke. The sound of our word is in most cases with the o short; but in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh senses, it is with o long, as if it were foarm.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakspeare.
It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job, iv. 16.

Gold will endure a vehement fire without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

'Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden, Æn.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions on the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah, liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

5. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rights.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice, yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business;
but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions that sit lower. Bacon, Ess.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies on Ireland.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?

A. Phillips, Distrest Mother.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.
VOL. II.

Nor seek to know

Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden, Æn.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts, Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakspeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.
Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
List'ning and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God form'd man of the dust of the ground. Gen. ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought

Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton, P. L.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton, P. L.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd. Milton, P. L.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his hero, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden, Æn. Dedicat.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner:
as, he form'd his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus form'd into an interest, and become the design, not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of this design is the routing of opinions form'd for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:

FOR

Thus form'd for speed he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden, Virg.

8. To sent. See the eleventh definition of the substantive.

Where the hearth was warm'd with winter's feasting fires,
The melancholy harp is form'd in brakes and briars.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

To FORM. * v. n. To take any particular form.
Chiefly, perhaps, a military expression.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakspeare.
Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon, Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryden, Aurengz.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice; the formal is constituted by the motion and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristick; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I will not let him stir,
Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

FORMALIST. * n. s. [formaliste, French; from form.]

1. One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

FOR

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire to persons of judgement, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospects to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a sly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

2. An advocate for form in disputations.

It may be objected by certain formalists, that we can prove nothing duly without proving it in form. Ld. Shaftesbury.

FORMALITY. n. s. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Ettrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barbac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden, Jew.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all sat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville, Scepis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington.

To FORMALIZE. v. a. [formelizer, French; from formal.] To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

To FORMALIZE. * v. n. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

Our gallants can formalize in other words. Hales, Rem. p. 84.

They turn'd their poor cottages into stately palaces, their true fasting into formalizing and partial abstinence. Hales, Rem. p. 111.

He formalized so long upon this, that Ireland remained still unsupplied. Clarendon, Hist. Rebell. b. xi.

There were many particulars in it, which the officers on the king's side, who had no mind to a cessation, formalized much upon. Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 148.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier, on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Bp. South.

FORMATION. n. s. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbutnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts on the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dawn doth tear asunder. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley, Serm.

FORMER.† n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

No more; I have too much on't,
Too much by you, ye whetters of my follies,
Ye angel-formers of my sins, but devils!

Beaum. and Fl. Valentinian.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER.† adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place. Dr. Johnson. — This distinction is just, as to present usage. But it was not always so. Spenser uses "former feat" for the first adventure of one of his heroes, F. Q. v. x. 15. And again, in the sense of antérieur or fore, F. Q. vi. vi. 10. "Yet did her face and former parts profess a fair young maiden."]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
— A third is like the former. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgement; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY.† adv. [from former.]

1. In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

2. At first. Obsolete.

Her fair locks, which formerly were bound up in one knot, She now adown did loose. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 67.

FORMFUL.* adj. [form and full.] Ready to create forms; imaginative.

As fleets the vision o'er the formful brain,
This moment hurrying wild the impassion'd soul,
The next in nothing lost. Thomson, Summer.

FORMICATION.* n. s. [Lat. formicatio, from formica, a pismire.] A sensation like that of the creeping or stinging of ants.

One of the most considerable signs of the disorder [spasmus] is a sense of formication. Dr. James, Med. Dict.

FORMIDABLE.† adj. [formidabilis, Latin; formidable, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

Such an accident that afflicts him is an evil, and such an object formidable. Bp. Taylor, Lib. of Proph. §. 13.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden, Ass. Dedic.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish. Dec. of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS.† adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare, K. John.
Countless multitudes

Of formless curses, projects unmade-up,
Abuses yet unfashion'd. Donne, Poems, p. 93.

The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiful reprobat in the mass. Hammond, Works, iv. 310.

FORMOSITY.* [old Fr. formosité, beauté; Latin, formositas.] Beauty; fairness. Cockeram.

FORMULA.* n. s. [Latin.] A prescribed form or order.

There are certain formulas of prayer to be used before they make the inspection, which they term a call. Aubrey, Miscell. p. 129.

FORMULARY.† n. s. [formulaire, French; from formule.]

1. A prescribed model; a form usually observed.

In the practice of all law, the formularies have been few, and certain; and not varied according to every particular case. Bacon on a Libel in 1592.

These poems abound with modern words, and modern formularies of expression. Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 23.

2. A book containing stated forms.

By way of innovating still further on our established formulary, he versified the decalogue. Warton, Hist. E. Poet. iii. 168.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. s. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

To FORNIFICATE.† v. n. [Fr. formiquer, from formix, Lat. an arch, or vault; and also a brothel-house; such places being anciently in formix. Milton apparently uses the word fornicated with a view to this double meaning. See FORNICATION.] To commit lewdness.

FOR

The heroical spirit of Luther — chose rather to be an honest husband than a fornicating friar.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 42.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATED.* adj. [from fornicate.] Polluted by fornication.

She gives up her body to a mercenary whoredom under those fornicated arches. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

FORNICATION.† n. s. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Lat.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door.

Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

3. Among builders, a kind of arching or vaulting. [Lat. fornicatio, from the verb fornico.] This word is printed, in some editions of Chambers's Cyclopaedia, formication, and is absurdly continued in Dr. Ash's vocabulary.

FORNICATOR. n. s. [fornicateur, French; from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;

Let her have needful but not slavish means.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FORPA'SS.* v. n. [for and pass.] To go by; to pass unnoticed.

Scarce can a bishoprick forepass them by,

But that it must be gelt in privacy. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

TO FORP'NE.* v. a. [for and pine.] To waste away.

Through long anguish, and self-murdering thought,

He was so wasted and forpined quight,

That all his substance was consum'd to nought.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 57.

TO-FORRA'Y.* v. a. [fourrager, Fr. "to forage, prey, foray, ravage, &c." Cotgrave. The same meaning is assigned to the Fr. fouirier; low Lat. forrare.] To ravage; to spoil a country.

They themselves were evil grooms, they said,

Unwont with herds to watch, or pasture sheep,

But to forry the land, or scour the deep.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 40.

They that morn had forraid all the land.

Fairfax, Tass. iii. 14.

FORRA'Y.* v. s. [from the verb. In the Border History forry is similar to invoad.] The act of ravaging, or making hostile incursion upon a country.

In dead of night, when all the thieves did rest,

After a late forry, and slept full sound,

Sir Calidore him arm'd.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 42.

TO FORSA'KE.† v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsaken, [Saxon, forjacon; versacken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook,

God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;

FOR

Prevent his falsehood, and forsake him first:

I know you hate him.

A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield

Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,

Commaned by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden, Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;

Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden, Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,

Forsaken of all sight she left the shore. Bryden.

Their purple majesty,

And all those outward shows which we call greatness,

Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoaken,

And draw the wond'ring gazer's eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSA'KER. n. s. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God.

Song of the Three Children, Apocryph. v. 9.

FORSA'KING.* n. s. [from forsake.] Dereliction.

Until there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

Isaiah, vi. 12.

TO FORSA'Y.* v. a. [for and say.]

1. To renounce.

But shepherd must walke another way,

Sike worldly soveinance he must forsay.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

2. To forbid.

And sithens shepherds been forsayd

From places of delight.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

TO FORSLA'CK.* v. a. [for and slack.] To delay.

See TO FORESLACK.

Ne rested he himself —

For dread of danger not to be redrest,

If he for slouth forslackt so famous quest.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 3.

TO FORSLO'W.* See TO FORESLOW.

FORSOO'TH. adv. [ponjoðe, Sax.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lysander

Deny your love, so rich within his soul,

And tender me, forsooth, affection!

Shakespeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison, Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guarillon.

FOR'STER.* n. s. A forester. So used by Chaucer, who also writes the word faster. See FOSTER.

FOR

An horse he bare, the handrik was of gone:

A forster was he sothely as I gesse. Chaucer, C. T. Prod.

To FORSTREAK.* See the second and third senses of To FORESPEAK.

To FORSPEND.* See the third sense of To FORESPEND.

FORSWA'T.* adj. [for and swat, from sweat.] Overworn; spent with heat. See FORESWAT.

Albe forswonk and forswat I am. Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

To FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forswore; part. forsworn. [forþspærian, forþspopen, Sax.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow

Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have.
Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!

Shakespeare.

Dryden, Juv.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury.

Shakespeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both land and laws.

Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood.

Smith.

To FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law,
— And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

FORSWEARER. n. s. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORSWO'NK.* n. s. [for and swink, to labour.] Overlaboured.

Albe forswonk and forswat I am. Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

FORSWO'RNNESS.* n. s. [Sax. forþspopenyr.] The state of being forsworn.

Manwring.

FORT.† n. s. [fort, Fr.]

1. A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest.

Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend.

Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.

Denham, Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.

Dryden.

2. A strong side, in opposition to foible; probably, as Mr. Bagshaw also supposes, adopted from the terms of the fencing-school; fort being applied to the strong part of the foil. See FOIBLE. We thus say, it is a man's fort, meaning that in which he excels. The French use, what comes near it, "le fort d'une affaire, the chiefest point in, the hardest part of, a business." Cotgrave in V. Fort.

FORTE.* adv. [Italian.] In music, loudly, with strength and spirit.

FOR

FORTE. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong.

To lock is in the wards of covert bosom,

When it deserves with characters of brass

A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time

And measure of oblivion.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

FORTH.† adv. [forþ, Saxon; whence further and furthest. The Saxon word is from the old French fors, (modern, hors,) as that is from the Latin foris. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;

From that day forth I cast in careful mind

To seek her out.

Spenser, F. Q.

It came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work.

Nehem. iv. 16.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.

Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd

For Bitias' death.

Dryden, Æn.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night.

Shakespeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?

Will she not forth?

Shakespeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,

Invites them forth to labour in the sun.

Dryden, Virg.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them.

Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,

That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.

Shakespeare.

5. Out into a publick character; publick view.

You may set forth the same with fairhouses.

Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,

Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,

To fierce contention gave a prosperous end.

Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end. Out of use.

You, cousin,

Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,

Do with your injuries as seems you best.

Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace.

Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bade me say forth; I said I was taught no more.
